

THE LOVE OF THE PART.

Vol. 60.

ST A. T. R.

As enilors watch from their prison For the long gray line of the coasts, I look to the past rearise", And joys come over 'n hosts Like the white sea-birds from their

I love not th' indelicate present,
The future's unknown to our quest,
To-day is the life of the pearant,
But the past is a haven of rest,—
The joy of the past is the best.

The rose of the past is better Than the rose we raviel to-day;
Tis holier, puver, and fitter
To place on the sarine where we pray,—
For the secret thoughts we obey.

There, are no deceptions nor changes, There, all is pieced and still; Nor grief nor ate that cetranges, Nor hope that no life can fulfil. But othereal shelter from ill.

The coarser delights of the hour Tempt. and debauch, and deprays; And we joy in a poisonous flower, Knowing that nothing can cave Our desh from the fase of the grave.

But surely we leave them, returning In grief to the well-loved neet, Filled with an infinite yearning, Knowing the past to be rest— That the things of the past are the bes

Lady Hutton's Ward.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "FROM GLOCK TO SUR-LIGHT," 'LORD LYNNE'S CHOICE,"

"WEARER TEAM A WOMAE,"

RTC., RTC., RTC.

CHAPTER XVII. - (CONTINUED.)

OW STRANGE," said Lady Hilds as she read the note over sgain. brought this, Greyson t" "Old Mrs. Paine, from The Firs, my lady."

"Was any message left with it?" she in

None," replied the man, "except that she asked me to give it to you soon, and when you were alone The butler imagined, as old Mrs. Paine had done, that it was a request for alms. Everyone in sorrow or want sought Lady Hilds, and no one had ever sought her in

As there was no more to be said, Greyson hastened to resume his duties, kaving the lady bewildered and surprised with the note in her hand said. "I will not be anxious over it. I wish, whoever wrote the letter, would have asked plainly for what is wante

She tried to believe that it was but a somewhat uncommon way of appealing for money. Yet they were solemn words; she heard them shove the soft sweet dream-like music that filled the ball-room-above the courtesies and homage offered to her; above the courtesies and homage offered to her; above the voice of fattery and love they rang out clear, cold, and solemn, "From the threshold of eternity I summon you,"

Bertie Carlyon wondered what spell lay on the rosy lipa—they were mute and still; the bright beautiful face had a troubled, wondering look wondering look.

"I fear you are very tired, Hilda," said Lord Bayntham to his young wife. 'I am not tired," she replied hastily, "but

Then she stopped abruptly, remembering those other words;—"As you value the love and happiness of those around you, do not my one word of this." "You are what?" said Lord Bayneham, smiling, yet wondering why his wife's face flushed and the words died upon her line.

She made some evasive reply, and turned away. It wou'd have been a great relief to have shown him the note, and saked him what he thought.

He would have understood it, but a strange had select the brilliant lady; she dared not disobey that command.

At the head of that samptuous banquet she was obliged to talk and listen, obliged to give her whole attention to her duties. Tet there were many who thought their young hostess looked tired and worn out. She was grateful when the Duke of Lulcham took his departure. The other guests were not long in following his example.

"We have had a delightful night," said Barbara Barle, as the little family group assembled in the boudoir; "but even pleas ure fatigues one. I propose—and you must second—my resolution, aunt—that no one speaks another word. Let us retire; Hilds looks tired and worn out."

"Though it would be delightful to talk over the ball," said Bertie, "I for one obey Miss Earle; and off he went to the smoking-room.

Yet even when they were all gone, when she steed in her room alone, Hilds still heard she stood in her room alone, Hilda still heard those mysterious words.

"Who is it," she thought, "that from the threshold of eternity would summon me?" Almost for the first time in her life, Lady Hilda Bayneham found herself unable to aleep. The golden head tossed wearily to and fro. For the first time she listened to the wailing of the wind, as to a strange wild music that told of sorrow and despair

"I will end this suspense," she thought.

'No one will be down much before twelve. I will rise at eight, and go to The Firs. If Claud discovers that I am out, he will think I am taking a morning walk."

Yet even that, the first concealment she had ever practiced in her simple, guileless had ever practiced in her simple, guileless life, troubled her.

It was a gray, cold morning—there was not even the glimpse of a sunbeam—when Lady Hilda dressed herself for her walk.

"You will be cold, my lady," said her maid, who wrapped a thick cloak around

"Yes," replied Lady Hilds; "but a long walk this morning will do me good. If Lord Bayneham asks for me, tell him I am gone out, but shall be back soon after

If Pauline thought there was anything extraordinary in her lady's proceeding, she made no comment.

The air was cold and bleak, the sky dull The air was cold and bleak, the say dull and leaden; there was a gray mist that hid the trees as Lady Hilds went on her way through the park. Once a new idea came to her, and made her rause.

'Suppose it should be a plan to rob me?' she thought. "But robbers and thieves could fear no question that would be asked in another world."

She reached the little cottage at last.

She reached the little cottage at last.

Mrs Paine was up, and busily engaged in preparing breakfast. She looked desed and the looked desed and the looked desed and the looked desed and looked loo ing with exercise, stood before her.

'You have some one here very ill, Mrs, Paine," said Ledy Hilds, "who wishes to see me."

The old women made a profound rever-ence to the golden haired lady.

"It will be my lodger. I suppose, my lady," she replied. 'She begged me to take a note to you last evening; she is very ill,—likely to die, the doctor says, any minute.

Lady Hilds was relieved to find it was a won at who wished to see her.

'Bue lies upstairs, my lady," continued

Wrs. Paine. 'Shall I go up with you, my "No." she replied, - 'I need not trouble ou. The poor creature wants some little Even as Lady Hilds went up the narrow staircase she heard those solemn words,— "From the threshold of eternity I summon

The mystery was soon to be solved. She knocked gently at the door of the room, and a faint, sweet voice bade her

When, in after years, did Ludy Hilda forget the scene? The room was small but clean, and even pretty. There was a little white bed with white hangings, a next tollette table stord was the bed a small for homes. lette tal. is with a few ornament. table stood near the bed; a small fire burned cheerily in the grate.

Lady Bayncham entered the room quietly, moving gently last any sound should annoy the one who lay dying there. She went up to the bedside, and then attered a low ory of surprise. White and worn, with a deep shade upon it, lay the name beautiful face she had seen in the summar. The woman before her was the one who had naked her so long ago for a flower at the lodge gates. The sad large eyes assented to burn as they looked at her, the lips trembled and quivered, but could not utter a word.

'You wished to see me," said Ludy Bayncham, bending over her. "I came as soon as I could. I have disturbed you wait a few minutes, and then you will be better able to speak to me."

The burning eyes closed as she spoke, and Lady Hilds, shoul, silently gasing at the beautiful rad face, wondering what was the story it told. Deep lines of sorrow were on the broad white brow and round the lips. As she gased upon the face, it seemed in some strange way to become familiar to her, as though years ago alse had seen and loved it in her dreams; then the faint sweet voice was heard egain.

PHILADELPHIA, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1881. "FIVE COMMA COPP.

was beard again.

"Are you Lady Hilds Baynebam?"
"Yes," she replied, "I am Lord Bayne-ham's wife"

"You were Lady Hutton's ward ?" continued the sick woman.

"Yes," said Lady Bayneham, quietly,
"she was my adopted mother; I knew no

Bhe stopped abruptly, for the dying lips uttered a wild cry, and the white face was turned to her with a look of deadly anguish that was almost despair.

"Hush!" said Lady Hilda, gently; "what is it? You will make yourself worse. What can I do for you?" The woman held out a thin white hand

The woman held out a thin white hand, and clasped the soft flegers of the young girl; she held them up to the light, looking at the costly rings that glittered there.

"Let me see your other hand," she raid. Lady Hilds gave it to her, and she glanced eagerly at it. Or the third finger shome a plain gold ring. When the sick woman saw it she presend it cargerly to her lips.

"Who gave you that ring?" she asked.

"Lady Hutton," was the reply. "She placed it on my finger on my sixteenth birthday. Why do you ask me these questions? What do you know of me?"

For all answer the sad, sweet eyes looked into her face, as though trying to read every thought of her heart.

"I could not die until I had seen you,"

"I could not die until I had seen you, e sa'd. "I have hungered and thirste for one look at your lace, for one word from your lips. My heart craved for you, so that I could not die I am breaking my cath; but it mas a covel one; besides I must know what answer to give, when I stand before the great white throne. God gave me a precious jewel, and I left it with another He will ask what I did with it. What shall I my !

Lady Bayneham thought the poor woman was raving, and she laid her white. cool hand upon the hot brow. Still those sad eyes seemed to drink in every change on her face.

"When I gave my jewel away," she orn-tinued, "I swore that I would never rec'a'm it: but I cannot die until it is mine again She will know, perhaps, in the other world, that I have broken my cath,—it must be so. Hilds, look at me. Have you no memory of me? Have you never seen me be-

"Your face is familiar to me," replied Hilds, wondering at the strange address; "I have seen something like it in my

'Nothing more?" evied the woman, a wild sob bursting from the pale lips. "In there no memory of the long sweet nights, when that go'den head was pillowed on my breast, of the long days when I nursed you in my arms of the hot tears I have shed over you.—Is there nothing that tel's you of my love, my sorrow, and despair? Ah, how many years is it since I clasped my little child in my arms, and took wha! I believed to be my last look at her! Hilds, I should rise, I should kneel there at your feet and ask you to pardon ma, but I did all for the

No. 30.

Lady Bayasham's face had grown very pale, her lips quivered, and her eyes grow

"I do not enile unimestand you yet." she whispered, "sell me more plainly who you are"

The white face turned to her, the lips trombling, the large, and eyes filled with

"I have hungered and thirsted for you," she continued; "my heart barned within ma, parened and withered for one glance at that face. On, darling, bend over me, lower still; look at me pardon me. I am your own unhappy mother—you are my only child."
"Me mother!" and Lady Hilds continu

only child."
"My mother?" said Lady Hilda gently;
"is it possible? can it be true?"
"It is true," said the dying woman;
"sighteen years ago my heart broke when I gave you, my only child, my love, my control to another. I could not die until I heard you call me mother once again. Oz, darling,—my own, my only child,—do not turn from me. Say you forgive me; then I turn from me. Say you forgive me; then I can die in peace."

Lady Hilds bent over the drooping face so full of wild sorsow.

"Tell me about it," she said gently; "I do not quite understand."

"Tell me about it," she said gently; "I do not quite understand."

Then, by the gray light of the winter mornisse, Magdalin Hurst told her story,—told of her simple beautiful girlhood spent in the bounie woods of Brynmar; of the fate that came to her when she met handsome, reckless, unprincipled Stephen Hurst. She told the sad story of her married life, with its wretched ending, when the gay, handsome lover of her youth stood in the dock, and the fatal sentence was pronounced against him.—how he wanted her to join ham in that far off lend; and in order to do so she had parted with her only child.

"It was not that I did not love y.w., darling," pleaded the sweet, faint voice. "I died in that hour; life has only been a burden to me since. I had nothing to give you but shame, micery, and reproach the burden of a tainted name, poverty and toil. She gave you wealth, homor, and all that the world esteems. I knew that you would be happy with her, for she love! you. Still, I could not face my Maker until I knew from my child sown lips that she was happy and well cared for. I am dying fast; call me mother once again."

Ludy Bayneham laid her face upon her mother's; she touched the pale brow with her warm loving lips.

'Mother," abe whispered, "I begin to re-her warm loving lips.

'Mother," abe whispered, "I begin to remember you. I love you, and have nothing to forgive."

There was a strange likeness between the two faces,—one wearing the pallor of death, the other rich in youth's best becuty.

'Micher," whispered Lady Baynekam, 'let me send for my husband to see you."

'No, my dear child," said her mother, starting, 'that cannot be. I have not come to drag you down to my own level, Hilda—to bring shame and diagrace upon you—to humble the pride of those who claim you now. Keep my secret as I have kept it. only came to see you once more—to hear you call me mother, to kiss your face and touch with my hand the golden curis I re-rembered and loved so well. I at a'l be buried where you can come at times to see my grave, but the story of my life must not be tell. Hida, swear to me that you will never reveal what you now know.

Standing by her mother's death-bed, Lady Bilds Baymeham made a vow to keep her secret faithfully, and never to reveal one word of what had passed "You are new heartiful" said Mandales

"You are very beautiful," said Magdalea Hurst fondly, as her hand lingered on the golden curls; "tell me, are you very happy, darling, does Lord Bayneham love you very

Lady Bayneham teld the story of h love—told it with sweet shy blushes that gladdened the weary woman who gased upon

"Has be never asked who your parents were ?" she mid.
"His mother did," replied Hilda; "but all that seems to be forgotten now." "Let it be so," said Magdales Hurri; "no good can come of telling it, only bitter shame and sorrow to you. I gave you that ring, Hilds, on the day I led you. I meant to freep my word and never see you again, but I could not. My heart seemed to burn with the thought of you. When I reached England, after that long absence, I took no rest up i I had discovered everything about Lady Hutton's ward. I heard that Lady-Hutton was dead, and that you were married to Lord Bayracham. I had but little money; I waited from London to your home here, and watched for three whole days at the lodge gate until I saw you. The days at the lodge gate until I saw you. The wild rush of joy comes back to me now. I saw a lady with a lovely face and golden hair; my heart gave a great bound, then a solemn silence fell over me. It was you—my little Hilda, no longer a child whom I could clasp in my arms, but grown a beau tiful, stately lady. When you came near I saw that your face was like what mine was when the world-called me fair. I longed for one word. You gave me a flower; see, all these months I have kept it. Your sweet eyes smiled on, me, your eyes pierced my heart, and I wonder now that joy did not kill me. I have seen you since. I could not leave the place where you lived. I took this room, and two months since I fell ill here. I have waited impatiently for death, knowing that when my last hour came, I should ask for you, and that you would

"How you have loved me, mother?" said Lady Hilds. "Why did you not send for dore ?

"It is better so," darling," said Magda-len "You might have betrayed the secret if you had known it. Before the sun sets I shall have gone to rest, and no one but you will ever know who sleeps in the namaless grave you must provide for me. I should like to tell you now of your father. Let me rest my head upon you for awhile" For the last time Lady Hilds pillowed the drooping head upon her arm.

"I loved him," said Magdalen, "all my life; I love him now. All is clear at the hour of death; I understand him at last. I thought be was a hero, Hilda,—a grand, no ble brave gentleman; be was simply a handsome, good-natured man. I worshipped him, and he knew it. If he had married him, and he knew it. If he had married someone with sense enough to have seen his faults, and have helped him to mend them, life might have been different to him. He married me for my beauty, Hilds, and I think he loved me. My poor father and mother were proud of my grand match. Lady Hutton tried everything in her power to persuade me to break it. She told me that I should be wretched, and I have been rightly punished, for my answer was that I would sooner be miserable with Stephen Hurst than happy with anyone else.

Hurst than happy with anyone eise.

"I need not tell you the story of my married life," she continued; "I need not dwell upon your father's sin. He broke the laws, and met with his punishment The tragedy of my life began after he left England. His of my life began after he left England. His sentence was transportation for ten years. At first he seemed heart broken, and wrote continually, begging me to join him. I had no money, and no friends. Heaven keep you, my child, from ever feeling a grief like mine when Lady Hutton offered me money to go to my husband, if I wou'd leave you with her. I left you. He knows what it cost me. You were three years old then, and lovely as a fairy. I went that long lowney with an aching heart. Tyne, I was jowrney with an aching heart. True, I was going to my husband; but I had left my child Hilds, at night I used to grow crany with grief; night brought you back to me in my dreams.

"At last I reached the place where my husband was. Many suns have risen and set since then, but the old pain comes back to me as strong and sharp as ever. I had left you for him, but he was not pleased to see me. He had written, pressing me to come, but the very right of imytpale face seemed to vex him. His first question was not of my child or of my journey, but what I had done to lose all my beauty. Did I think he should care to show such a wretched, pining, miserable creature as his

"I answered him not a word, Hilds; the life blood seemed leaving my heart. It was for this that I had left you. Yet even then, ungrateful, unkind, and unloving as he was, he was still my hero and my king. It took many years of neglect to leasen my love.

"I need not trouble you, my darling, with the history of those ten years. To me they were one long martyrdom. Burely Heaven has kept count of all I suffered.

"The time came when Stephen Hurst was once more a free man; that is eight your since. He was even then handsome, and full of high spirits.

"Maggie,' he said to me one day, 'Mag-gie, you must try and work your way back to England. I am soing off to the diggings.

You cannot accompany me.

"I begged and implored him to let me go.
I promised to work and help him, but all in vain.

"I connot be hampered with a woman," he said, roughly. Go back to England. My plans are made. I shall make my fortune at the diggings, and then go home to spend it. If I sail, then I must die there.

In either case you would be equally in the "Then he bade me good-bye, Hilde, and left me alone in that strange land. He took leave of me carelensly and lightly, as though he should return in an hour.

"I remember his handsome face with its

"I remember his handsome ince with its careless smile.

" 'Good-bye, Maggie,' he said, lightly;
"we had not had the best of luck. I think our marriage was a mistake, after all; no good has eems of it. Get back to England as soon as you can, and make yourself com fortable."

"Hilds, in my passionate sorrow I prayed to die. What had I done that such heavy woe should fall upon me? I had but a few shillings I was alone in a strange land; you, my child, were lost to me, and my husband, had deserted me. I did as other women. I fell upon my iaos, and cried out for death to release me from all sorrow, and lay me to vest."

Mardalen Hurst panned, as though the Magdalen Hurst paused, as though the sorrow so vividly remembered were fresh upon her, and for some few minutes was unable to continue her life's history

CHAPTER XVIII.

WHEN Magdalen Hurst had sufficiently recovered from the painful remembrances of her past life she remembrances of her past life she spoke again.

"I lived through it, Hilda,," she said; "death had no mercy for me. It took the young, the loved, the happy, but passed me by."

young, the loved, the happy, but passed me by.

"For nearly six years I worked and saved, so that I might once more return to England. Then came a letter from my has ban",—a cruel letter; but it had no power to hurt me for I was long past all pain. He told me his fortune was made, that he had been wonderfully successful in the diggings, and now he was going home to apand his money, and resume 'ne praition he nad forfeited in marrying me. He said, if I applied to his solicitor in Lordon, I should receive a yearly annuity that would keep me from all want or poverty. But I would not touch his money, Hilda,—I never answered his letter.

would not touch his money, Hilda,—I never answered his letter.

"I paid for my journey out of my little store of earnings. I went direct to London, thinking I might sain some information as to Lady Hutton. There I heard of her death and your marriage to Lord Bayneham. I could not rest until I had seen you, so I resolved to find my way to Bayneham—to look once more upon your face, and then I was indifferent to what might come.

"There was some more sorrow in store for

"There was some more sorrow in store for me. I was walking down one of those grand wide streets in London, where, they told me the nobles of the land dwall. I saw my husband, looking young, handsome, and dressed as he used to be when I saw him dressed as he used to be when I saw him first at Brynmar. He was talking and laughing with three or four gentlemen Hilds, my whole heart went out to him. I forgot his cruelty, his desertion,—he was my lover. I saw no longer the wide streets of London—I was in Brynmar woods, and he, with love in his eyes and on his line was by his side. Hardly knowing what I did, I cried. 'Stephen! do you not know me?' by his side Hardly knowing what I did, I cried, 'Stephen! do you not know me?'
'I forgot that my face had lost its beauty, that I was poor, ill-dressed and faded. He turned when I uttered his name; a "He turned when I uttered his name; a white savare look came over his face when his eyes fell upon me. He bowed to his friends, and walked hastily away to one of the large, grand mansions near. I followed him, not for money, Hilda.—not because he was rich and prosperous.—but for love of the handsome face that had once smiled into mine; for love of him who had once loved me. lowed me.

"I followed him up the broad flight of steps; the hall door opened, he entered, and I stood upon the threshold.
""Stephen," I said, speak to me only one word, and I will never trouble you again.'

"For all answer he called with a loud voice, and a man servant came quickly at his summons.

" 'John,' said he to him, 'look at this woman, that you may remember her. She is an impostor who annoys me. If she comes here again shut the door in her face, or call a policeman to eject her.

"His eyes glistened as he spoke; there was a hard, co'd, cruel look upon his face that hurt me even more than his words He neither spoke nor looked at me, and I have never seen him since. I turned with trembling steps from my husband's magnifi cont home. I do not remember how time passed. I asked a servant, who came from the house, the name of its master.

"'Mr. Fulton,' he replied; and then I knew that Stephen Hurst had changed h's name.

"My husband judged me rightly, Hilds. He knew I should never claim through law or justice what he did not give me from love. I could have taken revenge; I could have covered his name with infamy; I might have stricken the smiles from his handsome face, and held him up to scorn and shame; I might have done these things, had I not loved him. Even then I would have laid down my life to serve and save him."

The faint voice grew still weaker, and Lady Baynsham, carsasing the white, beautiful face, prayed her to rest.

"Thave little more to say, my darling," replied Magdalen Hurst. "I must give you one warning. Tour father would like to discover you now. He knows you were adopted by a wealthy lady. He knows that Lady Hutton was my friend. If he should hear that you were her ward, and see your face, so like mine in its youth, he will claim you as his child. Avoid all chance of meeting him if you can. I have heard that a new and strange gift of foresight comes to the dying; it has come to me, and I see trouble for you, my darling, from his hand."

"I must bear it, mother, patiently as you have done," said Lady Hilda.

Then there fell upon them a deep and solemn silence. Death was drawing near; his awful shadow cart an ashen pallor on the face of Magdalen Hurst, and dimmed the light of her eyes.

light of her eyes.
"Hilds, darling," she whispered, "if there should come to you as there has come to me, a worder why I should have suffered—

I, so young, so innocent, so unconscious of all wrong—promise me to remember that all those things which pussle us here will be not right in another world. I shall soon be set right in another world. I shall soon know why my life has been so sad and sorrowful."

As the shadow fell more deeply a darkly, the golden head of the young girl lay near where her mother's hand could touch the loved face.

Lady Bayneham was not frightened; she had seen death once before, and knew its power. All far, all thought, was lost in the one great knowledge that she was with her own mother at last.

own mother at last."

Hour after hour passed, and the shadow deepened; there was no more words, for Magdalen Hwrst's strength had failed her. Uatil sight and hearing were closed for this world, her eyes were fixed upon the face of her child, and she listened to every word that fell from those pure young lips. But when the grim presence stood by her, she made one great effort.

'If ever you see him. Hilds." she mur.

made one great effort.

"If ever you see him, Hilda," she murmuved, "fall him I forgive him, and loved him and blessed him as I died."

And then the sching, wearled heart was at rest. Dath left strange beauty on the white face; the closed lips were a smile as of one who had found peace. Warm tears fell from Lady Bayneham's eyes as she crossed the white hands over the quiet breast, and smoothed the long well of golden hair from the white brow. the white brow.

"Good-bye, mother," she said, pressing her warm lips on the cold dead face: "good her warm lips on the cold dead face: "good-bye. You were lost to me in life, and found in death. You will sleep well until I join

Mrs. Paine came up when she heard the

Mrs. Paine came up when she heard the sick woman had ceased to suffer.

"I am glad she sent for me," said Lady Bayneham, in a co'd, calm voice, that startled her as she spoke; "she nursed me years ago, and I am her only friend."

Mrs Paine saw nothing peculiar in that, but she wondered why Lady Bayneham shuddered when strange hands began to touch the lifelest form.

"Lat some one come and star with you."

"Let some one come and stay with you," she said. "I will arrange all the payments. Let the funeral take place on Tuesday, and let her be buried in the churchyard at Oulston. You can attend to it, I suppose "Mrs Paine was eloquent in her protestations."

tions.

"She had lodged with me for many months," she said, "but I do not know her name. What shall I say when I ask for the papers?"

A crimson flush covered Ledy Bayne ham's face. Was she, her beautiful, deeply-wronged mother, to lie in a nameless grave? No, it could not be; a plain stone might mark her grave, but those papers should bear no false name, let come what might.
"Her name was Magdalen Hurst," she replied with quivering lips

L dy Bayneham knew it would not be possible for her to return to the cottage if her yow and the secret were to be kept. She bent once more over the quiet dead face and kissed the smiling cold lips. She looked her last at the mother she had known only in her dreams and in death; then she went out, leaving the dead alone. In the same, dead voice she gave her final orders to Mrs. Paine.

"Let the fuseral take place at two o'clock on Tuesday afternoon," she said. "I will see you again when it is all over."

Like one in a dream she left the cottage where her dead mother lay. The gray mist had become damper and thicker—it seemed to enfold her like a garment. Despite the to enfold her like a garment. Despite the cold and log, when Ludy Hilds reached one of the iron seats placed in her broad path, she sat down,—not to rest, but to collect her thoughts. Her brain whirled.—it was impossible to arrange her idea. Oould she impossible to arrange her idea. Could she have been dreaming? Last night, only a few hours ago, she was the brilliant queen of a brilliant throng, beloved and admired, perfectly happy, without a cloud in her sky, now she was sick with the weight of her own misery. Mingled with the grief she felt for her beautiful mother's cruel fate, came the thought of what she was,—the Countees of Baynesam, wife of one of England's proudest early, the bearer of a name great and illustrious, yet the child of shame and reproced, the daughter of a convicted felou, of an unprincipled man who had cruelly doomed her make to sersew and death. Through the thick his she looked wildly up to the gray sky; he listle hands elempel in a gong.

"Weat have I done," she crief, has I am panished so? I have done no wong.

-why should it be? Way has the still carrent of my life changed? The in my youth and happiness and inaccess he shame and serrow cought me cut?

As she sat these in the flast satisfied by pain, L dy Hilds wished the mother who lay dead and at rost had never field to change her lot. Hed she been bought we to bear it, it would not have seemed what would Claud say if he know how was she to live with this secret burning as bilistering her very life?—she who had seen hidden from him one thought.

It was a heavy burden that the sins, the secret was, and the caprices of others had hid on that fair, drooping head.

What would the stately countees mytake, so proud of her stainless name as spotless race; she who said so haughtily fint the women of her fa mily had ever been without repreach? How that fair, possiface would whiten and quiver if she have that her son's wife was a convict's deaghter! Where would the shame and many end? "They would send me from him she said to herselt, "and put an ther in my place."

With a sinking, humbled heart, she owned

With a sinking humbled heart, she owned

With a sinking, humbled heart, she owned to herself that it was all wrong. She the convict's daughter, had no right to be mistress of that proud home, wife to the noise brave lord, who ruled own it.

The golden head drooped more mily. She was quite alone; there was only the gray wintry sky over her head, and the thick mist around her. Mo sunshine mothel her with its light, no birds with their some thick mist around her. No sunshine mothst her with its light, no birds with their song, she knelt on the ground, and hid her headin the iron rails. In this, the hour of great sorrow and desolation, there was no huma heart for her to trust; she must bear her so-row alone and unaided Lady Hilds west as see never did before, and never did again.

as see never did before, and never did agis. She wept for her deed mother, for the vasished happiness of her own life, for the wreck of her hopes and love.

Tears brought relief to her burning be wildered brain. The cool wind retreate her. She remembered the brilliant party who would soon be wa'ting for her.

It was then nearly eleven; she had to walk home, and prepare to meet her her band. There was no time to lose; she was through the park with rapid steps. All was silent in the Castle; the servants we busy, but none of the guests seemed to hew left their rooms. She reached her own apartment unnoticed. When she stood there, with the same dreamlike feeling dunreality, there came to her mind strangs solemn words she had read, and had seve understood before: "The sins of the father shall be visited woon the children was to understood before: "The sins of the fal shall be visited upon the children, even to the third and fourth generation."

(TO BE ONWEINDED.)

GAIT AND CHARACTER—Observing popular new ple move slow—their needs move alteratily from side to side, while they occasionally stop and turn round. Careful persons like their feet high, and place them down its and firm. Sometimes, they stoop down their feet high, and place them down is and firm. Sometimes they stoop down pick up some little obstruction, and place it quietly by the side of the way. Calculating persons generally walk with their hands in their pockets, and their heads slightly is clined. Modest persons generally say softly for fear of being observed. Time persons often step off from the sidewalk or meeting another, and always go round a stone instead of stepping over it. With awake persons 'toe out,' and have a long swing with their arms, walle their hands shake about miscellaneously. Careless persons are forever stabbing their toes. Lat persons scrape about loosely with their Absent minded persons often Abeent minded persons often take the real, and sometimes flad themselves the their kness in a mud puddle although it sidewalks are excellent Dignifes move allow and erect Fast persons across the corner, kick every dog they are kness down little children, run against the process of the corner, kick every dog they are kness down little children, run against the corner in the corn knock down little children, run against ladies, and hit every twelfth man's rise was their albows. Very neat men occessors stop to wipe the dust from their hear their hands hang by their sides.

A lady was peaking the amiability of he friend's hasband and asked how is to world she had ever brought him to make perfection, whereupon the friend smell asserted that she did it chiefly with a count mallet

A bridal gown with two treiss was

PRAR OF THE PUTURA

BT J. G. BARRE

The will of heaven for the passing day, Tes for the feature for the passing day, as a reserve of torture for these hept, as a reserve of torture for thee hept, estant the moment when fig., having size half, in thy household raging, sleek a slay.

And, in thy nonsenous raging, same and siav,
with havoe thou beforeherd hest bewept;
With havoe thou beforeherd hest bewept;
Oh, Envubdued, un wise, self-harrowing soul!
Thy Father's will is changeless and entire;
He bids thee trust it as a periset whole,
For all that ever will or can transpire,
For all the billows that may round thee roll,
The chill, dark river, and the chastening

Kate's Lovers

BY BERTIE BAYLE

B this your final answer?"

"I suppose so. I would not say No," if I did not mean it."

The girl who utbred these words raised a pair of very blue eyes to the dark, sullen face of her companion, Charles Brandon, who had just that moment asked her to be his who had just that moment asked her to be his wife. She was pulling a moss rose to pieces with about as much computation as she had refused that man, and not the slightest bit abashed at the serious turn the conversation had taken during the walk through the woods to her own door.

He was about to launch into something like invective, but by a strong effort checked the owned She, the to be mis-the noble, ore saily, only the and the mosted heir song or heading or ferming her serilida west id again, the varior the ning, be-perreched ni party or has

"Never mind," he said. 'Thid you good.

Her first impulse was resentment at his manner of addressing her; but on second thought, and considering that her refusal of him had caused an allowable excitement in him had caused an allowable excitement in his feelings, Kate Miller laughingly tossed her fair, brownish curls back off her shoul-ders, saucily throwing the red-hued leaves she had crumpled in her hand at him—but he was gone.

Charles Brandon went back to his business in the town, his regular features as composed as usual; and no one would have supposed, from his steady hand, his clear brain, and the manner in which he ba'anced that but a law hours previously his accounts, that but a few hours previously his whole being had been convulsed with

About three weeks later, in the same place where Charles Brandon had received his dis missal, Kate Miller stood, overshadowed by the dark foliage of the trees—but not alone. At her side, and with one arm circling round her waist, speaking sweet nonsense in her willing ear, was a young man, whose bronsed face and clear gray eye indicated one who had battled with the world, and had full reliance in his own ability to meet

He had been a playmate of Kate's when both were children, and had only recently returned from the gold-diggings, where he had been fortunate enough to secure what scarcely one in every thousand does—a for-

Harry Cullen—for such was his name—felt exaited as one does under the influence of some ethereal draught, and if a presentiment of some foreshs lowing evil crossed his mind, it was quickly dispelled by a glance of the soft blue eyes of his companion.

"Tall me once again that you love me,

A "Yes," scarcely audible above the murmuring sighing of the trees, was the re-

"And always will?" he asked.

"And always willi" he saled.
"Always," she replied; "for ever."
"Then am I the happiest of men. For this would I brave again the perils and dan-

Many were the envious glances cast at Kate by the young ladies for having won the heavt of Harry Cullen. as not a few of them had entered the lists against her. mong the number was Kate's bosom friend, Mary Gardiner, a dard-eyed brunette of some twenty summers.

'Kate, my dear," said Mary, running in one morning, 'bave you heard the news?"

'No," said Kate; "what about?"

"Why, there s to be a grand ball on Thursday next, at the Town Hall. Everybody will be there; so I came to ask what you intend to wear."

"Oh, I suppose plain white; that becomes

"Well; now, mind. look your best. But pehaw! who is there worth dressing for in

The evening came; and Mary Gardiner, who was acknowledged to be the belle, enwho was acknowledged to be the belle, endeavored by every art to engage the attention of Harry Cullen, who on his part felt flattered by her preference, little dreaming of the jaclous eyes that watched his every action. He denced with her, and talked, until suddenly he remembered with a start, as if waking from a dream, that the magnetic spells of this girl's voice and manner had so engrossed his time as to make him on tirely negligent of Kate. He hastened to her side, and in his most winning manner apological for his long sheanes; but Kate was hurt, deeply hurt, at this sudden, strange desertion.

Twice during the evening she had found range desertion.

Twice during the ovening she had found

Charles Brandon's eyes fixed on her with a singularity pleased expression on his face, as if he had divined her search cause of troublet in a short time he came round to where she was, and asked the pleasure of a dease. At another time she would have refused; but now—now was her opportunity for revenge. What better chance o uld happen to prove her spirit than by causing with his rival? She knew these two men hated each other on her account; and to gratify her angur she danced with Brandon, which not estranged her from Harry during the remainder of the evening.

The next morning. Harry Oulien being and at heart, and yearning to make his peace with Kate, determined to call on her; but on consideration, thinking it might be advisable to give her time to recover from her bud humor, sent her a note instead, asking her forgiveners, and intimating that he would see her that evening. Having despatebed the note, he went out for a stroll in the woods with his dog and gun.

Kate had spent as unhappy night; bad dreams had disturbed her rest; the face of Brandon as she saw it when she refused to become his wife, malignant and vindictive, had haunted her; and even the remembrance of his face when dancing had caused unpleasant recollections; she fancied she had detected a malicious suite about the mouth. And then her quarral with Harry. Would he ever speak to her again, after the outrageous manner in which she had treated him? Could she expect it? or could she justify her conduct?

Presently a knock came to the door. She listened intently or the strong of intently or the door. tify her conduct?
Presently a kno

resently a knock came to the door. She listened intently, and with a flattering heart, hoping against hope it might be her darling Harry. But no, 'twas not his voice. The girl came and handed her a note. She glanced at the direction. Oh, joy! It was glanced at the direction. Oh, joy! It was from Harry—her own Harry.

Calmly and quietly she spent the day—almost happy—reading his note over and over again, and longing intently for the evening, which with its darkness would usher in his beloved presence. Never, to her imagination, did a day seem so long. The sun, with its hot, powerful rays, would it never sot? would the soft twilight never appear? But hark! What crowd is that along the road? What is that they carry so guntly? She goes to the window, and asks the information from some bystander. He informs her it is the dead body of a man found in the woods, killed by the accidental discharge of a gun.

charge of a gun.
She shudders at the tale, and wonders how his sorrowing friends will bear the loss.

Perhaps he has a wife to mourn him; perhaps some fond girl; who will be heart-

Having left the window, she suddenly returns, thinking herself stupid at not having inquired the name—perhaps it might be some one known to her—when she was horror-stricken at seeing her Harry, pale and bleeding, carried by

She shricks, "I killed him!" and falls back in a lifeless swoon. When Kate returned to consciousness the gloom and misery of a lifetime seemed concentrated in that one moment.

Poor Ka's Miller! The shock was dread-

Sae thought she never would outlive ut time is the sovereign healer of all things and in youth especially, months ac-

Reader, was she heartless? She never asked herself that question when she took Charles Brandon for better, for worse. In Charles Brandon for Detter, for worse. In less than one year after the hour of that ter-rible suffering she became his wife. Years rolled on, bringing a greater amount of sorrow than joy to Kate Brandon. Little children nestled in her arms but a short while, then were carried to their graves; and, worse than all, it had been one long warfare, one continued struggle between her husband and herself—the omitable spirit he could not conquer-the temper he could not tame.

A good, devoted mother, an excellent housewife, but a companion, adviser, guide to this evil-natured, heartless, pitiless man,

But the time had come for her, and the great mystery of death was closing round

Charles Brandon had gone out in the morning, carelessly inquiring 'how she "No better. Bend the doctor as you pass," she replied.

The doctor came, but the great reaper arrived first, and Kate Brandon was lying in the awful majesty of death when her hus-band looked upon her again. She had fought the battle. Let us h. pe she had won the

'Q teen Victoria always keeps her appointments.' Why should she not keep all appointments, despite the weather, with every appliance to insure comfortable transportation at her command? If she had to go on foot to the proroque Parliament in rubbers and waterproof, carrying am umbrells, with the wind going sixty miles an hour, her punctuality would be commendable.

Obstinacy is the heroism of little minds.

ABOUT ALLIGATORS.

the alligators, or legarios, digities. or twenty fact long. They fact remainably on twenty fact long. They fact remainably on fact, which they caled in the river, and are, known assections to go in a company of ten or twenty to the mouths of the small rivers and creeks, where two or three samed while the tide in high, leaving the rest at the mouth; when the tide has fallen, one party bests the mouth of the creek, while the other swims down the arream, applies their talls and driving the fish into the way jaws of their devourers, which each them and lift their heads out of the water to devour of their decourses, which each them and lift their heads out of the water to derout them.

When these voracions evastures cannot procurse a sufficient quantity of fish to satisfy their hungar, they betake themselves to the awannahs, where they destroy the calves and foals, turiting about during the day, and seining their pray when salesp at right, which they drag to the water-cide, and there devour it. The cait's and dops appear sensible of their danger, when they go to the rivant to drink, and will how and bark until they attract the attention of the allisators at one place, and then drov back and run to another, where they drink in a hurry and immediately leave the water-life; other wise, as hes been the ones, and liligator would seine on them by the none, drug them under the water, and drown and eat them.

When the ingarto base once tested the fish of animals, it will almost abandon the fish, and reside principally ashore. I or one crossed a large plain, where I aw a living one buried, except the head, in the clay, builds the remains of several deal one. One inquiring how they came there, the peasantry told me, that when the rains hill in the mountains, a great part of the savenauch is insudated, at which time the lagaritor prowificated, at which time the lagaritor prowificated, at which time the lagaritor prowificated, at which time the lagaritor set inbended in the clay, till the ensuring rains set them at liberty; they feed on fire, and can exist in this manner for six or seven months. When found in this state, the natives at ways, kill them, sometimes by piereing them with laces between the foreing and the body, the only visible part in which they are vulnerable. If they be not prepared with a lance, they collect wood, and kindie a fire as as sen to the mouth of the lagarito as they dare venture, and bern him to death.

These animals will sometimes seize buman beings when bathing, and even their purpose. They have also been known to swim alongside a small cance, and to suddenly place one of their paws on the lagartes alive; they employ two methods, equally terrific and dangerous to a spectator at first sight. A man takes in his right hand a truncheon; this is of hard wood, about two fast long, having a hall forward at each hand a truncheon; this is of hard wood, about two feet long, having a ball formed at each end, into which are fastened two iron har-poons, and to the middle of this truncheon a plaited thong is fastened. The man takes this in his hand, plunges it into the river, and holds it horizont-lly on the surface of the water, grasping a dead fowl with the same hand, and swimming with the other; he places himself in a right line with the lasame hand, and swimming with the other; he places himself in a right line with the legarto, which is almost sure to dart at the fowl; when this happens, the truncheon is placed in a vertical position, and at the moment that the jaw of the lagarto is thrown up, it is thrust into the mouth; so that when the jaw falls down again, the two harpoons become fixed, and the animal is dragged to the shore by the cord. The natives now surround the largarto, and bait it like a bull, holding before it anything that is red, at which it runs, when the man jumps to one side, and avoids being struck by it, while the animal continues to run forward in a straight line, till checked by the thong. When tired of teasing the poor brute, they kill it by thrusting a lance down its throat, or under the foreleg into its body, unless by accident it is thrown on its back, when it accident it is thrown on its ba may be pierced in any part of the bally, which is soft and easily penetra'ed.

The other method is, by taking a fowl in one hand, and a sharp strong knife in the other; the man swims 'fill he is discoult connecting to the allignment and the state. the other; the men swims till he is directly opposite to the alligator, and at the moment when it springs at the fowl, the man dives under the water, leaving the fowl on the swrince; he then holds up the knife to the belly of the animal, and outs it over on its back, and is carried away by the stream. The tecth of the alligator are often taken from the jaws, and many curious its tile knick-knacks are made from thest.

BUCKLARD.

BUCKLAND.

BRIC-A-BRAC

CHIRA'S LAMBULAGES—The spoken innegrage of Ohion so define in every separate province that people living a hundred miles apart ou so more understand each other than a Marwor's can understand a Motion-tot. The mendaris or evert language is more counce than any other dialect, and is the official tongue of the empire.

THE FULL SHIP—The Tartam, immens for the use of the how, teach their youth to shoot as a wark made of hids, pierced in the middle. Ta's is probably the oldest form of target. Such were in very early use among the flaxons and a'terwards those painted with rings and a white spot. Famt the Sucone we have the term buil seys, the word 'bull' or "boil" being applied to any this circular.

MOURERING THE DRAD—There are many

MOURIEM TER DRAD -There are MOUNTING THE DRAD —There are many well state of people whom nothing can induce to put on a mourning germent when not in black themselves. B servous knows the origin of the outtom of purying the dead with their feet to the east, a custom among Christian nations and adopted at first that as the Lord is to owne in the But, the dead may arise and stand with their faces to Him in the resurre viton.

IMPIRATION OF GRAIDS -Byron

JESPITATION OF GENTUS —Byron wrote some of he icoser poses ander we is a sense of gin. Coleridge Do Q siney and Shadwell prodded the muse with option. Sheridan did good work with the aid of brandy; Ben J'meon was assisted by "senary," and A chylus is said to have been invariably intoxicated when he wrote. The great achievements which some authors have produced at a single sitting show that much have played an important part in literature.

LADIES.—The mistresses of massor-houses, in former times, served out to the poor, weekly, with their own hands, certain quantities of bread, and were therefore called to look or loaf daps, and the words were at length corrupted, and the mistress is called to this day Lady, that is, Lof day. The introduction of ladies to court was first to that of Louis XII., of France, 1490 As a title of honor, the title of lady properly belongs to the daughters of earls, and all of higher rank.

GALLOWS MARRIAGES —The old custom of marrying under the gallows to sent life.

GALLOWS MARRIAGES -The old custo GALLOWS MARRIAGES—The old custom of marrying under the gallows to save life seems to have been the most romantic of all forms of tying the knot. If a man or woman would consent to marry, under the gallows, a person condemned to death, the criminal might thereby be saved from execution. An old E-glish ballad tells the story of a merchant of Chichester who was thus saved from hanging by a loving maiden; and in 1784, at New York, a man actually in this way escaped death. Another author tells the story of a criminal who refused marriage at the loot of the gallows, and preferred death.

death.

By. VALENTINE's DAY.—The origin of the peculiar custom of Bi. Valentine's Day is involved in mystery. Among the pleasant traditions, perhaps none is more worthy of adoption than the following: Medame Ry, ale, daughter of Heary IV, of France, having, built a palse; near Turin, in honor of the saint, then in high esteem, she called it Val-mine; at the first entertainment which she gave in it, she was pleased to order that the indies should receive their lowers for the vear by lots, reserving to herself the privilege of being independent of chance and of choosing her own partner. At the various balls which this gallant princess gave during the year, it was directed that each lady should receive a necessary from her lower, and that at every turnament the knight's trappings for his horse should be furnished by his allotted mistrees, with this proviso, that the prime should be here. These pleasant interchanges among the "young people" flastly grew into a second or the prime and the first trappings for his horse should be here. "young people" fisally grew into a custom, and thus originated the rachange of love tokens on St. Valentine's Day.

KISSING DAY IN RUSSIA.-A CUITOUS BASter custom prevails among the Russians of all grades of seciety. The fashion is to present an egg to a fiend the first time you meet him or her—most generally her—after twelve o'clock on Easter night Tre one twelve o'clock on Easter night The one who presents the egg exclaims, "Christ is risen!" the other answers "Is he risen indeed? and three bisses follow Of course the second one has generally an egg ent in present in return. Timid swales eagerly to be advant a go of this custom to ob-tain the privilege of embracing some food object whom they would otherwise on too object whom they would otherwise or too object whom they would otherwise or too heabful to approach. These eggs are of all kinds—some simple bens' eggs, gilded or silvered, or colored; red. blue, or volet; some sugar eggs, embeliished with all kinds of fanciful designs. There are also diminative gold marble, or simple wooden eggs; others are large enough to serve as ladies' travalleg bass; or they may be placed on traveling tags; or they may be placed on stands to serve as a meeful family ornament; hens may set on a nest full of boa bon eges; and some may be fit ed up inside with a set of children a toys. There are oggs, in fact, arranged in every imaginable manner, and made out of severy imaginable manner, and made out of every imaginable manner, and made out of every imaginable material. On this day, it is believed, hundreds of thousands of these charge hands in St. Petersburg alone, and the sum spent in their purchase must be predigious.

SOOW IN THE CETT.

BY STUBL TAND.

In night's onim hours the enowhakes soft

And garmented the earth for coming day, Yell'ng alike 'be lown's poliuted way.
The gracey plain, the hill-lop and the dell.
But when the morn rose is there need to tell.
How soon the city's mow was trampled it Crushed by the myrind feet—made foul a Fair is necessed thou 'co doet being and wee With crowning cares, unreal joy and wee They cruck thy beauty, soil the pure your

Change noblest gifts to things most vile and Until at last we slowly own thou art
The rarest grees a bustling life can show,
And mostly found in souls that dwell apart.

The Window Light.

BY A. MATERSON.

I'LL keep the light burning in the window for you until you come back," said the wife, as she went to the door with her husband. "it's "Il the light you'll have, I think, for there's a snow coming up, and the moon's gone already. You d better stay at home, Will ""No. I'll be back soon, Kathie, "he said. "T'll remember you and the light." And then he kissed her, and she listened to his firm step going down the road until it died away in the distance.

Then, with the hope that always hides somewhere in a loving woman's heart, she sat at her sewing, building pretty carties in the air.

the air.
William was to leave of drinking entirely.

and they were to prosper as they had never done before; the farm would flourish; the home grow pretty under her careful hands.

Other children would come, though their only little one lay in the churchyard, and then a tear fell upon the work the mother had in her hands.

It was once when Will had taken too had let it fall and hurt it.

She knew he had killed it, though he loved it as much as she did;he never guess it, and he never should know.

Poor William! he had only one fault, and that—oh, yes, he would rid himself of that, and all would be well.

So she stitched and thought, and thought and stitched, until the candle, sinking in the socket, warned her how time had flown, and, turning to the clock, she mw that it was now three hours since William had left

Saddened, but not terrified as yet, the wife set a new cardle in the socket and bound back the curtain that none of the light might be lost from the road.

Then she folded her work and sat waiting

Alasi she watched the night away.

William never came at all. There had been some good company at the inn, and he had been urged to drink until his senses left him, and when dawn broke was staggering arm in-arm with another as sens-less as himself amongst the docks and wharves of the sesside town which was the mearest to his home.

How it happened he never knew any more than how it was he let his baby fall, but he had shipped himself for a year's voyage, and when he came sufficiently to himself to remember home and Kathie he was out at sea, and to those about him the tale he told was nothing but a joke.

He wrote to Kathie a penitent letter, nding with a vow to return to her a sober man; but she nover got it.

Perhaps it was lost, as a letter is now and

That he was drowned seemed to be the popular belief, for the water was very near, But, at last a word fell on Kathie's ear that gave her one straw to hold by.

The miller, who must be at his work when he might have been at the mill that Men had raised his gate, and he 'believed he heard Musicr's voice.

"And I saw one of em, Mrs. Muller," he said, 'and he was a sailor-with one of them wide collars turned down. He was a mailor, and they were going to the town."

Then Kathie began to hope. For she had beard of men thus carried off to sea on long ration, and crews were sometimes short.
"William will come back," she said; and at night, when clouds overcast the sky, voyages. Not every man desired to be a on the night he left her with a kim. If he ever came he should know she had waited for him.

The long days were full of miserable man; the long nights full of terrible

That letter would have been so much!

That letter would have been so much! the could have been patient with that in her bosom; but the Fates had not spun it into their web for her.

Could she have had a vision of that ship in the morthern sees, and of the face of her imband as he paced the deck and thought of her, it might have saved her, for the liseignine of the vessel had been a good thing for William Muller, and he was in a fair way to be a sober man for life.

There had been no chance to write to the poor woman again.

When they parted from that ship by which the lost letter sent they went alone into the wil dernes of water, and the world might have been empty of all human beings mue the crew of that one black vessel, for all that they could see or hear to the con-

He also was sad and remorseful; but how much happier was the man's than the woman's?

Action sustained him, and he knew the limit of his anxiety.

She had but that window with the sun falling through it by cay, the caudle burning in it by night. The dull routine of her daily life, and an illimitable anxiety.

Her eyes shone brighter, her skin was clearer, her teeth more pearly. She grew thinner and thinner, and her face fixed itself into an expression that seemed a smile, but was not—the deadliest omen of all.

By consumption had her father died, her mother, who was his own cousin, her little sister, her brother. The disease had seemed to shun her until ow, and even now she did not guess her fate. She was weak; but she had never been very strong She did not feel well; but how could she,

with William away?
The year had passed. The ship was coming home.

With a glass the captain could see the Once Willian begged that he might look through it.

"My wife is there, captain," he said, "and I'm anxious about her."
But what did the shore line tell him? No-

As he stepped sahore, with his wages in his pocket, he could hardly walk fast enough, he was so anxious to reach her.

He strode out of the town and through the village. He raused the inn with a shudder. He turned into the long country-road, detted here and there with farmhouses and barns—a low-lying country, flat and uninteresting as a landscape.

There was neither moon nor star; but he knew his way well, and at last, just where he knew his home stood, he saw a blur of yellow light.

Nearer and nearer to it, as he now began to run, he saw a candle—a candle set in his own window.

Kathie's hard had set it there he knew: and indeed it bad.

All day long Kathie had been very weak and ill. She could not sew as she usually did.

"I shall never see you again, William," she said, "never!" and she began to weep, the tears rolling heavily from her eyes and down her cheeks.

After a whileshe gave one long, shuddering sigh, and did not move again.

It was at that moment her husband, run ning homewards along the road, grew cer ning homewards along the road, grew cer tain that the blurred, yellow light was that of the candle his wife had set in the window to guide him home. He came on towards it faster and faster

yet. He saw not only the candle, but the hand that held it-Kathie's own. He saw her face lying against the pane the skew ner lacelying against the pane-the skewe of her worn gown, through which the arm shaped itself so sharply. 'Kathie!' he cried, wild with joy, with hope, with love that seemed new-born, for his love for his wife had at least never been sullied by any thought for another woman; "Kathiel Kathiel Kathie, darling! I'm here! I we come home, Kathie!"

She did not stir. His voice brought no answer. He shook the door. "Kathie!

Still no reply. against the How still she was ! how wan! how pale ! 'She is saleep," he cried; but I cannot Walt I'

And he set his strong shoulder against the door and burst it open.

He rushed into the little kitchen, the red firelight flashing in his glad eyes as he crossed it.

Kathie, wake up!". "Kathie, it's your William come back to you!"

But Kathie would never wake again Kathie would never wate again.

Kathie would never know that all her watching, waiting, and praying had been in vain. She was dead!

Her light had gone out for ever, though the light had burned brightly for her husband.

The Worst of the Two—This story is told of a tamous preacher: I walked down my garden some time ago, when the flowers were nicely out, and saw a big dog; and, as I was sure he knew nothing of gardening. I threw my walking—stick at him, and gave him some recommendations to 'go home.' To my intense surprise and shame, the dog picked up my stick, and wagging his tail, dropped the stall at my, feet. He heat me altogether. I said to him, 'Good dog,' and I told him to come again and whenever he liked, if he was a dog of that kind. I felt that I was the worse dog of the two. THE WORST OF THE TWO -This story

The Married Coquette.

BY RENRY PRITE.

R. WYNHAM was Mrs. Wynham's husband.
She was a young woman, beautiful undoubtedly, with dark luxuriant beauty.

Paritanic society called Mrs. Wynham s

icked woman, for she was a flirt. Mrs. Wynham called her promiscuous firtations amusi

But a woman who habitually sets pro-priety at defiance is not very reliable. They were spending summer in a dull

Mr. Wynham had taken her out of the way of temptation, in hopes that she would learn to love solitude, to cultivate the vir-

Vain hope! In a week Mrs. Wynham declared she was dying of the blues, and if her husband persisted in living like a hermit, he might do so alone, she would leave him for her, but never let her leave him.

The poor man went back, prepared to pet her, humor her, go to the world's end with her, but never les her leave him.

He was not transported with delight to see Mr. Ned Satterly bending over his wife's chair, his handsome bronde head very close to the dark beautiful face turned towards him.

It could not last much longer. Mr. Wynham was gradually making up his mind that she must choose bet ween him and Satterly.

One evening Mr. Wynham drove up from the station, in a torrent of rain, amidst the crashing of thunder and fisshing of lightning.

He found Mrs. Wynham was not at

He made inquiries. In the morning Mr. Satterly had driven the lady to the beach, about ten miles off, and had not returned. In half an hour a man with a pale, set face, with a bitter anger, and half acknowledged dread at his heart, was driving a pair of horses furiously through the rain on toward the seashore.

He stopped before the principal hotel of the watering place

He walked down the darkened verandah to think quietly a moment before entering to prosecute his search

Through an open lattice light streamed from a small room.

He stopped He saw a table glittering with silver and erystal.

Beneath the light stood a man and woman, each holding a glass of foaming

The woman slipped her arm inside her companion's, touched his glass with hers, and 'aised it to her lips. Then her laughing eyes turned to the window. Her hand trembled; she started

Mr. Wynham's unacknowledged dread had become a terrible certainty.

The woman he loved had fa len.

There was no hope—none.

He had no thought of vengeance on Satterly.

He knew that she had led the way, and the man, nothing loth, had followed.

Mrs. Wynham, 'are you ill, or have you seen a ghost ?" questioned Satterly, as her rosy lips paled, and she shrank from him.

'Neither; but I fancied I saw my hus-band standing by the window."

'Impossible! He will know you cannot get home to night. He will trust you with Satterly placed his glass on the table, and came to her, and laid his hand on her shoulder.

imply to her rang in his voice.

It was the first warning of the inevitable issue of her conduct.

She sprang to her feet. "There is no question of my husband's trust in me. Will you oblige me by trying to find out if he really is here?"

Without a word Ned Satterly left the room to look for Mrs. Wynham's hus-

Conviction comes suddenly to a woman.

By a glance, by a touch, Mrs. Wynham learned that she had disgraced herself and her husband for ever. Batterly came back.

She had been mistaken, her husband was not in the house. The storm was as bad as ever.

She could not go home. If she would come to the theatre as before arranged, it was about time. She was sitting in a low chair. She cooked up and said— "Perhaps I am nervous at being away

"Perhaps I am nervous at being away from him. We have never been separated twenty-four hours since we were married."
"I should hardly have supposed you such a devoted pair," he said. "Do you feel the separation so keenly to night?"

Before she could move he had stooped and flung his arm round her neck. She pushed him from her. She pushed him from her.

"Red! Ned! spare me!" She fell on her kness before him, and her agony and shares were written in her

He looked at her a moment.

She had thrown herself on the protection of his honor; she had appealed to him for mercy; dase he wrong her farther?

All that we good and strong and manly in him answered.—

in him answered—
"Get up, Edith, get up; the blame is all mine. Forgive me. I would give my life to undo the cowardly wrong I have done you." He lifted her up.

"To morrow I will tell him all. You are very good to me, Ned. I will go to the theatre with you"

There was a convulsive sob in her voice.
"Not if it pains you."
"I will go; I will meet you in the par-

As she crossed the vestibule, a heavy hand was laid on her shoulder.

"Where are you going?"

She turned and faced her husband.

Her first impulse was to throw her arms about his neck and beg his forgiveness; but his voice had a cold hard sound.

She was not humbled yet. All her pride

She was not number years and defiance rose up.

"I am going to the theatre with Mr. Satterly. Have you any objections?"

He bent his head close to her ear.

"I have come to move you. If you go to the theatre with Mr. Satterly, I disown you

That is as you pleasa. I go to the theatre with Mr. Batterly."

"You have chosen." He turned from her.

She went swiftly up the stairs.

In a few minutes Ned Satterly and Mrs.

Wynham sat together in the theatre. He did not know of her meeting with her kas-

The rain had ceased, but occasionally a roar of thunder was heard, and a flash of lightning illumined the hall.

Buddenly, after a cossation of about ten minutes, there came a deafening peal of thunder, a cracking asunder of walls, and a terrible cry :

'The house is struck! Fire! fire!" In a moment the seats were empty.

Mrs Wynham started up. Ned Satterly tried to hold her back. She wrenched herself free, crying:

'Let me go! I must see him! He must forgive me!'

Ned Saterly knew that if he sat still the chances of life were in his favor, for the lightning had struck the other side; and the wall, though cracked, was not likely to fall

But the hour had come to prove his truth. His place was beside her.

He followed ber, pushing his way as a strong man can. He caught Ler in his arms, whispering:

"Cling close, for his sake!"
He pushed his way through, regardless of all obstacles.

He gained the outer passage—he was half way down staifs. There was a swaying of the crowd, a pressure against the side railing, and it gave way. Then Ned Satterly, still clutching his burden. crying:

"I cannot save you, darling!" and fell down into the ball beneath. He knew that suddenly she suddenly was snatched from him, and then all was still and quiet When Ned Satterly awoke he found himeefl in a 'arge room, with Mr. Wynham bending over him.

He knew that death was near-was staring him in the face.

'Is she safe Wynham?"

'Safe, Satterly. I had only time to take her from your arms when the crash came," said Mr. Winham with something life a tear standing in his eye. Satterly stretched out his arms, and drew

Mr Wynham to him. He spoke with great effort.

"Take cake care of her, Wynham. She was true to you. The wrong and the blame are mine. Ask her to forgive me. Tell her that I count my life lightly, for it raved bers. He was dead.

He had given his life for a woman who was not worth; he had died with no thought of reproach to her, with a prayer for forgiveness from her upon his line.

If there is atonement for sin, surely he had m-de it. If there is pardon for sin, surely he had

Mr Wynham sank down by the soft, with bowed head. A white-robed figure, with heggard face and great black staring eyes, entered the room

Bhe looked at the man lying dead, in the pride and giorious strength of his manhood, at the fair face still and peaceful. Bhe knelt beside her husband, not daring to touch the dead man who had made himself a sacrifice for her, stricken and confused by the sin on her soul, by the terrible price paid for her folly.

Truths which we hear will less affect us then those which we see.

THE DAY TO THE HIGHE.

BY ALION THOMPSON-METHELL.

From down to dusk, and from dusk to dawn, We two are sundered always, sweet, A few stars simile o'er the rocky lawn And the sold swh-shore when we meet. The twilight comes with shadowy feet.

We are not day and night, my fair, But one. It is an hour of hours ; And thoughts that are not otherwhen Are thought here, 'mid the blown is

This meeting, and this dusk of ours.

Delight has taken Pain to her heart, and there is dusk and stars for these (h linger, linger! They would not pe and the wild wind e-mes from over With a new song to the offve trees.

And when we meet by the sounding pine, Sleep draws near to his dreamless broth And when thy sweet eyes answer mine, Peace neeties close to her mournful moth And Hope and Weariness kies each other

THE LOST WIFE.

BY J. F. SMITH.

CHAPTER XVIII -(CONTINUED.)

B we previously observed Mrs. Lynx was a dutiful and submissive wife, except on those rare occasions when her jealously was aroused. Then few perposs ared to oppose her; and most certainly her husband was not of the number.

The detective was seated in his room at Hacklebourt, and expecting a visit from the Right Hon. Edward Berrington, whose arrivel in England a note had made him acquainted with, when, to his consternation and surprise, his better half made her appearance. It was not excitement that he read in her countenance, but rage—wild, appearance. It was not excitement that he read in her countenance, but rage—wild, furious, ungovernable passion. "Matilda!" he exclaimed severely.

"Wretch!"
"What brings you here."
"Monster!

Mr. Lynx made one more effort to main-

Mr. Lynx made one more effort to maintain his authority.

"Are you mad?" he asked.

"Where is the baby?" screamed the infuriated woman. "I am your true and lawful wife; and I've got my marriage lines.

Flesh and blood can't stand it. I musn't come to your office, musn't I; but I will come. I sm come; and I'll come whenever I please, and smash—smash—"

The speaker had already commenced a

The speaker had already commenced a

The speaker had already commenced a practical illustration of her threats, when the door opened, and the Hon. Edward Berrington walked into the room.

"What is the meaning of this scene?" he demanded "And who is this female?"

"That female, I am sorry to say, my lord, is my wite." The detective knew the effect the word "lord" would have. "Someone has informed her that your infant seen and his nurse are residing here,

"She is jealous!" 'Bond her away," said his visitor, "or I shall have to seek another agent "

The dim consciousness of having made a fool of herself crept over the obfuscated brain of the virage, as her fury and suspicious slowly disappeared.

"Don't be awgry Paul dear," she commenced in a whining tone. "If it's bizz ness I am quite satisfied. All your own fam." fau.t. Men never should have secrets from their wives; they are sure to find them out.

Good morning, my lord."
"Sky!" exclaimed the unhappy man.
"Yes, my lord, with much pleasure, my lord

And Mrs. Lynx reseated herself. Will you undertake the care of this child for a year or two? You shall be liberally paid for your trouble," he added,

The hesitation lasted only till her husband nodded permission. 'Of course I will, your lordship," she replied; "and be a mother to it Never had one of my own—been married these ten years and got my lines to prove it. You need not look so angry, Paul, I ain't agoin to er ter into domestic matters now. How long has the little darlin' been at Hacklecourt "Two months, Lynx, has it not? The lady darted an indigrant look at her husband. If a secret of that importance could be kept from her two menths, the question naturally presented itself. "How many similar ones had never been revealed?" and her suspicions of the private enquiry (Mee wonderfully increase "No, Matilda, no. Nothing of the kind, I assure you. On my honor," added the detective, assuming a look of injured in-

"I hope not, Paul; but I cannot help a wife's misgivin's."

Great was the astonishment of her neighbors when Mrs. Eynx returned home with her infant charge. Some saked if she had found it; others if she had bought it, facetiously saking, how much the pound?

Vulgar minds delight in mystery; it is a passion they can only be equalled by their credulity—and that is inestiable. This was fed by the vague magnificent hints thrown out, in the strictest confidence, of covers, by the wife of the detective, who indicately warned them not to be surprised if the surprising turned out to be surprised if the surprising turned out to be someting. She would not exactly say a prince, but strange things had happened. Nather would she tell the name of his futher. She was bound to secrecy. She might have added by her ignorance of R, and her husband sotutinacy in refusing to tell ft.

Paul would be knighted at the very least, and that would make her a lady.

Mr. Lynx smiled when he heard all this; but as it amused his wife and diverted on quirers from the real channel, he wisely permitted the gossip to run its course.

From the little house in Hackle court. Mr. Berrington proceeded to the offices of Mr. Quarl in Lincoln's Inn Fields, and was shown into that gentleman's he observed.

"The name, I presume," he observed, when he saw the lawyer carefully examining his card, "is not a stranger to you." The old gentleman admitted that it was not

"On the death of my late father in law, his papers, I find, in my absence were forwarded to you."

"Nothing can be more correct than your information on the subject."

"Your client-

"Your client—"
"You are laboring under a mistake," interrupted Mr. Quarl. "Alwyn Bouchier was not my chent. The mistake is a natural one; proceed, sir."
His visitor appeared surprised.
"You were his friend, perhaps?"
"I never even faw him."
"The mis'ake is more inexplicable then.
The rangers must have been transmitted to "The mis ake is more inexplicable then. The papers must have been transmitted to you in error. I have come to claim them."

"In what characterf His executor."
"Mr. Bouchier left no will, but, as the husband of his only child, my right, I conceive is indisputable."
"There are very few things indisputable in a legal sense, Mr. Berrington," observed the lawyer, with one of his queer smiles, "as you would have discovered had you studied law instead of diplomacy."
"I do not comprehend you."

"I do not comprehend you."

Mr Quarl unlocked the iron safe and drew from our of the compartments a letter which he deliberately opened and laid upon the

"Why your father-in-law selected me as the depository of a trust, more or less important, is irrelevant to the question," he observed. "I have a cespted it and will read you his instructions." "You will never give up my papers to anyone except my caughter, and only to her personally; any written authority or application must not be complied with."

"Birange!"
"Possibly he bad his reasons"
"I cannot understand them. Can you?"
"I can only suggest them," answered the lawyer. "When, on the marriage of his lawyer. "When, on the marriage of his daughter, the late Alwyn Bouchier conveyed to you the estate of Wraycourt, there was a condition annexed that it should descend to your issue by the lady, or; failing such issue, on your death becomes her absolute property. He was a prudent man, and caused the deeds to be executed in duplicate for fear of accidents."

"You might neglect to make provision for her. Mrs. Berrington has no settlement. Deeds have been lost."

"Mine are at my bankers," observed his visitor haughtily.

"Your brother, I presume?"

WY cs. Excellent firm-undoubted respecta bility-"trust them with any amount of menoy" observed Mr. Quarl.

Am I to understand and your refusal is final? "Most final and positive," was the cool, determined answer. "In tors." "Happy to communicate with them," replied the lawyer. "Fieet and Hora—know them well; thorough men of business.

Good morning, Mr. Berrington."

"Dog't like this anx ety to obtain them," muttered the old man after his visitor had departed, 'and yet he bears an honorable name. Bouchier may have been deceived departed. "and yet he bears an honorable name. Bouchier may have been deceived in him. Strange," he added musingly. "that he should have selected me for this important confilence—the man whose dream of life had blighted—whose heart—pooh! what a fool I am—heart, indeed! I shall be prating of love fancies next. Pary there is not a looking—glass in the room that I might see my gray hairs and iron visage—how its wrinkles would laugh at me. Walli well; the trust is a sacred one. She is her child, and I must watch over her."

Contrary to his usual practice the old lawyer had been so candid in his explanations with Mr. Berrington as he might have been. In the event of the long sought for certificate of the remote cousin's death being found, the abeyance of the poerage would terminate, and Clara became not only Lady Eastcott in her own right but mistress of Wraycourt, it being annexed to the into account.

It was not to be wondered at, considering the Hon. Edward Burrington know all this, that he should have felt so anxious to obtain his subseria have papers.

Finding that his solicitors gave him no hope of success in any legal attempt to make Mr. Quari give them up, he returned to Stuttgart more embittered than ever egainst his wife, whose health—that is to say, physical health, by which the body lives—he found greatly improved on his arrival.

my, physical health, by which the body lives—he found greatly improved on his arrival.

But the mental health was gone.

Having no further excuse for remaining in Statigart—not even the doctors, so iteradously fond of their rich English patient, could suggest one—Mr. Berrington seriously commenced preparations for his departure Clars asked no questions, not doubting but England was to be their destination.

They had been travelling several days, and at the close of an early spring day entered the old ducal town of Schwineberg. Our readers need not look for it upon the map. It is one of those petty German courts at which England, for reasons far too profound for any out a minister for foreign affairs to fathom, keepe up the farce of a resident minister.

On reaching the city Clars was surprised

On reaching the city Clara was surprised to see the shabby hungry-looking guard turn out and present arms, as the carriage turn out and present arms, as the carriage rolled part the post.

Her astonishment was greater when it drew up at a gloomy looking but extensive mansion in the Grande Place. Servauts in her husband's livery appeared to assist them, and the travellers passed through a line of them drawn up between the hall and travellers in the line of them.

reat staircase.

"What does this mean?" she saked.

"My brother," replied her sister-in-law,

"has re-entered the diplomatic service, and has been appointed minister plenipotentiary to his ducal grand highness of Hesse

Schwneberg.
"Mad!" repeated Mrs. Berrington to It was extraordinary how tensoiously she clung to the terrible idea.

CHAPTER XIX.

ESSE SCHWINEBERG is one of those pocket principalities which look so pretty upon the map, and re mind the traveler of a doll's house in which everything has been modeled upon an infinitesimal scale.

The reigning sovereign, Ernest XVI., had his ministers, chamberlains, generals, observath counsellors, counselors ordinary and extraordinary, to assist him with their individual and col ective wisdom in govern ing a country not quite so large as force in time of war amounted to fifty foot soldiers and twenty five dragoons.

In the Diet his grand ducal highness exercised half a voice, but only in conjunction with his brother potentate of Lifestack, which practically reduced it to a mere squeak. His contingent to the federal force in time of war amounted to fifty foot soldiers and twenty five dragoons.

Fortunately the prince was not frequently called upon to submit to this serious diminution of his army, which, when it did occur, rainfully compromised his dignity by leaving him without fitting escort when traveling from his capital to the Alteschloes, the rales, hunting seat, fortress, and state prison of his dominion.

Although far from brilliant, the little court of 8 hwineberg was a very solemn affair; etiquette reigned supreme. If the unities were occasionally neglected, the proprieties were rigidly observed. The Grafise Van Schlammermacher, who governed everybody, was invariably spoken of as the grand duke's adopted sister. They have pretty names for very unpleasant thing in Garmany, and "adopted sister" is one of them. The clever weare of the wife, regulated her household, directed education of her children, managed the court theatre, nominated the ministers and professors of the university, where a desim smoke dried individuals went through the serious farce of delivering lectures, rarely attended, and conferring degrees, as old Traphois, in the "Fortunes of Nigel" says, "for a con sil de ra-tion," the amount of which was as well-known as the tariff at the custom-house. Twelve pounds seven shillings and twopence for a doctor in important confilence—the man whose dream of life had blighted—whose heart—pooh! what a fool I am—heart, indeed! I shall be prating of love fancies next. Pity there is not a looking-glass in the room that I might see my gray hairs and iron visage—how its wrinkles would laugh at me. Wall! well; the trust is a sacred one. She is her child, and I must watch over her."

Contrary to his usual practice the old lawyer had been so candid in his explanstions with Mr. Berrington as he might have been. In the event of the I'mg sought for certificate of the remote cousin's death being found, the abey since of the pressage would terminate, and Clara became not only Lady recollected that the queen of the first king of the lik was the custom-house. Twelve pounds seven shillings and twestom a trifle more, in divinity might be purchased for exactly what it was worth—dog-cheap.

Why England should maintain a rendent minister at the court of Schwineberg, is one of theorem which the diplomatic mind alone can unravel. Perhaps he was sent to counterbalance some fancied influence of the reigning blood had condescent to become the wife of one of the Georges. An awful merelitence when it is recollected that the queen of the first king of the lik was the custom-house. Twelve pounds seven shillings and twestom shilling indict of Muster. Her husband loved her, and by repeated concessions obtained from the Elector of Hamover, the head of his family, the recognition of his wife as Dashes of Brunswick, and the hand of the crown grince, afterwards George I, for their only child the unhappy 8 sphis Dorothes, whose days were ended in a prison, whilst her tyrent and his mistress revelled in the palace of St. Jumes's. There had been no divorce, hereby a separation brought about by the intrigues of the infamous Countes Plates, the adopted sister of the aged Elector, out of avenge for the virtuous firmness of the princess in repelling all a lyances to intimacy. The ancestress of a long line of diplomats did not hesitate at muster to earry out her designs.

The bones of Count Konignmark still rest, we believe in their unhallowed grave in the palace.

The succession of the House of Hanover dist of Munios. Her husband loved her, ad by repeated concessions obtained from

The succession of the House of Hanover to the throne of England was a fearful price to pay for civil and religious liberties, which were written in the achiest blood of the country; the seal was of mud, the coarsest, filthiest mud, which time hardened into clay.

An impress of virgin gold has since replaced it; and Englishmen may now point to the living seal of the great charter of the Constitution with a pride that fleds an echo in every heart a love which makes the name of V ctoria a hallowed symbol in every shold of the land.

household of the land.

The reputation of the new minister to the court of Schwineberg, and his great personal wealth, which rumor did not fail to emaggerate, created a sensation in the little capital, and his reception became an affair of the first importance.

His grand ducal highness inspected the uniforms of his troop of cavalry, and commanded them to be thoroughly repaired. The Countess of Schlammermacher saw to the condition of the state liveries; the throne room was carefully swept, the windows the condition of the state liveries; the throne room was carefully swept, the windows cleaned, and the curtains sent to be scoured, and, when everything was in rea liness to impress his excellency with the grandeur and mightiness of the state to which he was accredited, the day of audience appointed. Three court carriages, with a hackney-coach-like air of former respectability about them, conveyed the Right Hon. Elward Berrington and his suite to the palace. The guard presented arms, first in the court-yard, then ran round to perform a similar duty on the grand staircase and ante chamber. Everything passed off admirably; Ernes' XVI condescendingly assured the representative of England of his desire to remain on terms of peace and friendship with main on terms of peace and friendship with his sovereign, and his audience was at an

The Schwinebergers believe that when the intelligence was received in London, the funds rose in consequence. We have not taken the trouble to verify the fact, lest we should be placed in the unpleasant neces of undeceiving them.

For more than a week little else was For more than a week little else was talked of but the magnificence of the prince, and the splen fid reception of the K-glish minister, which possibly might have formed the theme of conversation to the present day, but for an incident that electrified both court and city, caused chamberlains and latter splents of the relace minister electrometers of the relace ministhe gloomy corridors of the pelace, minis-ters to tremble for their portfolios, citisans ters to tremble for their portfolios, citisms to raise their hands in astonishment, and their wives to predict that something dreadful must be about to occur.

When sufficiently recovered from her illness, Mrs. Berrington had her audience of the grand duchess, when the state pageant, and the race of the guards to perform double duty, were repeated. Everything passed of admirably till the conclusion of the caremony, when her highness terminated by observing to her visitor that she would detain her no longer, as the Grafiae Von Schlammermanher was waiting doubtless to receive her.

"Whom did your highness condescend to

"Waom did your high name?"

'The Grafice Von Schlammermacher." "I do not know the la ty," replied Clara, with a blush of off inded m ideaty, ' and have not the remotest intention of raying my re-spec's to her."

There was something ludicrous in the sur-rise and consternation depicted on the coun-mances of all who heard her. The princess herself appeared greatly em-

"Perhaps you are not aware," she fal-red. "She is the grand duke's adopted

"I am perfectly informed, madame, of her

"A most excellent woman."

Mrs. Berrington curtaied profoundly.
"She will be so angry."

The English woman regarded her with a look of phy.
"Do see her," added her highness ner-wously. "I am sure you will like her; every-one likes her at Schwineberg. Why do you not answer me?"

"Respect keeps me silent, madame," replied her visitor, as with a curisey more profound than the first, she retired from the ducal presence.

"It is not my fault!" exclaimed the duchess, turning eagurly to her attendants, as if as if to solicit their testimony in her favor "Most extra-relivary conduct i—unhear of i—but the Beylish are an eccentric ?" "Very," echoed the chamberian sentes

"No under-bood" said the ladies in waiting.

"Bo ignorant of court usages !" chimed in the gentleman-usher, who, according to stiquette, expressed his opinion last.
"What will the grand duke my !" added

"What will the grand duke say I" added their mistress nervously.

The far more important question of "What will the Grafine von Schlammermacher say?" rose to every tougue; but a feeling of respect due to the weak, humble, submissive wife of their sovereign restrained them 'rom uttering it. When the extraordinary conduct of the wife of the English minister was generally known, it was confidently predicted her husband would receive his presport. Some went so far as to assert peesport Some went so far as to sesert that war would be declared between the two

Partynately, milder sentiments prevailed in the councils of his highness, and the peace of Europe was not disturbed. It was given out that the offender was mad; and as her refusal to be presented to "the adopted sister" appeared inexplicable to the worthy Schwinebergers on any other supposition. Schwinebergers on any other supposition. the report was generally believed. The wrath of the Grafine was eventually appeared by her appearing in the state box of the Court Theatre, seated between the ducal highness, and the gift of a diamond

After the', who that cared for his place dared suspect her virtue.

Elisabeth Berrington smiled when she heard of the aftir, and to confirm the impression of her sister-in-law's insanity, paid marked attention at the first court bell to the all to waterful mistrates. the all powerful mistress, who pronounced her a most sminble person.

"Charming." said the grand duchees.

Her husband smiled approval.

In the deep retirement to which the recent death of her father and domestic sorrows had plunged her, the unhappy Clara neither heard nor cared for the petty intrigues around her. Her conduct had been prompt-ed by principal and self respect, and she ought no more upon the subject.

Little did she imagine it had excited the implacable a mity of one who never forgave.

and who only waited an occasion to make

The Barringtons hat been established rather more than a year a' Schwineberg, when the limited circle of English residents, whom poverty, chrice or the usual excuse of educat ng their children had exiled from home, received an important addition in the person of the Earl of Ris ip, a widower of large fortune with an only son, a charming little fe low about eight years of age, the Viccount Alten

As his 'ordship was still a young man, As his 'ordship was still a young man, scarcely over thirty, and had ever so many thousands a year, his arrival created no slight sensation among his fair country-women. It was extraordinary the vast smount of sympathy his lonely position excited. There was a sorrow to console, a sacred duty to a dear metherless child to undertake, and everyone knows the beautiful, the gushing devotion with which unmarried British females are ever ready to essertice themselves in such a distreming

None but a monster could suppose the

None but a monster could suppose the prospect of a settement, and a coronet, had any influence with them.

Mill ners and dressmakers felt the advantage of the disinterested struggle that ensued. The Oglivie girls were so sealous, they quarrelled with their dearest friends the Histings is rgiving a picalic to which they were not invited. I was an unfair advantage, considering how very intimate they had been; and to mark their sense of such treachery, the included fair ones gave a ball, the expense of which we abrewdly suspect crippled their means for the next six months.

not to be outdone.

It was impossible to guess to what ruinous lengths the contest might have been overied but for the arrival of the Charltons—father, daughter, and son-who brought their own carriage and servants with them, took one carriage and servants with them, took one of the best houses in the place, and commenced their campaign with a splendour with threw the Hastings picnic and the Optivie ball completely into the shade.

R valry appeared impresible against such overwhelming odds, and the Charitons remained master or rather mistress of the

Although the Orilvies and the Hastings no longer visited, they met consionally at the quiet ten-parties of Mrs. Ward, the wife of the British chaplain; her drawing room was their neutral ground. She was a good natured little woman, pretty but incipid, like most clergy men's wives, with a slight weakness for gossip, not scandal—to do her justice her convermion never degenerated into that, although probably it might have done but for the stong heart and head of her husband, who had been a fellow of his college, but who married, as very learned men frequently do—a face.

What still more strange, he never appear-Atthough the Ogilvies and the Hastings on frequently do—a face.

What still more strange, he never appeari conscients of the mental deficiencies of a woman he had selected to be the partner of his Mis. Possibly it had been his fil-fortune to meet with intellect only in the abstract. If so, his indifference to it is untly accounted for.

Hard brilliancy rarely attracts.

"Another ball on Thursday week at the Chariton's," observed Mrs. Ward with a sigh, at one of her usual reunions. "It is really too had of them."

"Are you not invited?" inquired the eldest Miss. Ogilvie.

"Of comme I are "

Miss Ogilvie.

"Of course I am," replied the lady, "and that is what I complain of. I have been to three there already in my pear colored silk dress, and don't know what to wear."

"It cannot last much longer," said Mand Hastings thoughtfully.

"It ought," replied the chaplain's wife, for I had it new last spring."

Her visitor explained that she alluded to the extravegance of the Charitons, and not to the dress.

to the dress.

"Be under no uneasiness on that account," replied the Rev. William Ward, for the first time joining in their conversation. "They are rich."

Miss Winton, a very poor but well known maiden-lady, remarked that she should have judged otherwise from the postively indelicate manner in which the daughter threw herself in the way of his lordship. The poor man was absolutely persecuted by her attentions.

The Ogilvie and the Hastings factions decidedly agreed with her.

"The colonel," continued their host, "inherited a large fortune from his brother, who died in India. The son distinguished himself at Oxford."

"And Miss Chariton?"

"I know nothing of the lady," said the chaplain, "except that she is very, very handsome and clever."

"Handsome I with such eyes 'Buch boldness of expression 'B) free in her manners."

'Charity, ladies, charity," exclaimed Mr. Ward, with one of his quiet smi'es. "You ward, with one of his quiet similes. "You forget how many years you have been shut from society in this retired nook. The world may have changed."

His wife saw the ill-effect his observation produced upon their visitors, and hastened to introduce a subject more interesting to herself. The pearl colored silk dress.

'Do you think if it were turned and retrimmed it would be recognized?' she trimmed it would be recognised ?"

Bo momentous a question was not to be lightly ans wered; a solemn consultation en-sued. After many pros and cons it was decided that it would.

Mrs. Ward g anced at her husband, b" the reverend gentleman made no sign. He was once more absorbed in his book.

"Hear what, my dear?"

'That I cannot wear my pearl-colored silk at the Charlton's ball on Thursday 'Wear black, then."

"Black! repeated his wife, satisfied that this time she had reason on her side 'No, Mr. Ward, it has not come to that yet. I would rather be taken with a sore threat or the scarlet fever, and send an excuse, than so diagrace myself."

'Fevers and sore throats are serious things," observed the chaplain. "But how diagrace yourself? "Black!—black at a ball."

A look of virtuous reprobation from her visitors gave additional force to what our female reeders will d'ubtless consider a piece of unanswerable reasoning.
'Oh—ah, indeed!'ejaculated the husband.

"New one, Mr. Ward."
"Yes; the dress I brought you from England three months ago. Tae one my mother sent you."

'Oa, William, William," exclaimed the ledy, looking greatly shocked. "I never knew you guilty of telling a fib before." The gentleman appeared considerably pussied, passed his fingers several times through his hair as if to assist his rec-ollection, then rang the be'l and requested the servant to bring a certain carpet bag into the drawing room.

"The one your mistress promised to unpack," he added, "on my return home." When the demestic returned with it the reverend gentleman placed it carefully up-on the table.

"I think you have the key, my dear," he served. "Thank you—yes, that is the right one."

Mard began to feel exceedingly

Mark. Ward began to feel exceedingly uncomfortable—not from any fear of her husband's anger, he was far too philosphical even to lose his temper with her, but from a sense of the ridsculous position she had placed herself in. Three months had the carpet-bag been waiting to be unpacked! It really was too bad!

really was too bad!

First appeared several pairs of boots, next a dress-c at, sundry shirts, followed by half-a-dr xm cravats terribly crumpled, them—but we will not mame the articles of male attire, which under any other circumstances would have elicited numerous pretty ejaculations from the indica, and cries of Oh. Se i—at last a brownpaper parcel carefully tied. It was pounced upon in a instant, and opened.

"Beautiful," said Mrs. Ward, as a rich giace s'lk, a pale apple-green, met her delighted game.

The Ogiives pronounced it a love of a color, but the eldest Miss Hastings suggest-ed a doubt whether it was quite suited to the lady's o'mplexion.

Jady's e-mplexion.

'Oh, William, how could you."

"How could I what, my dear?" replied her husband, touching her cheek with his finger, as if he had been speaking to a spoilt child.

His wife felt annoyed, not at the action, but the tone of his words, which implied such an utter absence of respect, not for her as a woman, but of her intellect as a companionable and responsible being.

"I am not an infant, Mr. Ward," she

"No, my dear."
"And don't like being treated as one." "Everyone says you consider me as

"And who is everyone?"
"The Ogilvics, the Hastings, Miss Winton.
You never blame anything I say or do."
"And are you offended at that?"

"No. Oh, no"
"Besides, why should I blame you?"
"I am sure I don't know, William."
The silliness of the reply dissipated the somentary feeling of astonishment, and her husband quietly resumed his book once

At the English chapel on the following unday there was considerable addition to Sunday there was conthe congregation in the persons of Madame Von Pinhert, nee Oreech, whose publication Von Piahert ase Creech, whose publication in detence of the rights of her sex had ended in the loss of several thousand pounds and her marriage with the editor; her cousin Lucy Beacham, the gaunt waiting-ma'd Hannah, and a stout buttons who carried the prayer books of the party.

Madame Von Pishert had determined to travel, and having secured her fortune to her own particular use as fast as parchment and wax could bind it, the Horr, who would fain have enjoyed him etium oum dignitate in England, was to comply. In fact, one had scarcely consulted him upon the

By the end of the second lesson the Miss By the end of the second lesson the Miss Ogilvie had not only decided that the lady in gold spectacles was vulgar, but whispered their conclusion to Miss Winton, who imparted it to the Hastings.

Decidedly," said the eldest sister, as she started in a thin soprano voice the hymn for the day.

Great was the astonishment when at the conclusion of the service, Mrs. B strington, whose pride was supposed to be second only to that of a personage but very rarely named, accorded Lucy as she passed from

"I am sure I have seen that sweet face before," ahe observed, "although I cannot recollect where."

"At Wraycourt Church," replied the fair girl, blushing with pleasure at the recognition. "I am the daughter of Mr. Beachars, and travelling with my cousin Madame Pahert.

"Von Pinhert." said her relative with "You Pishert," said her relative with dignity. "Nes Creech"

Mrs. Berrington bowed.

"And this is my husband," added the speaker, dragging the Herr forward. "We have quitted Eigland, where first principles are so little understood, to seek the light of truth and philosophy in Vaterland. I intend on my return to publish a book. light of truth and philosophy in Vaterland. I intend on my return to publish a book, ethical, satistical, and artistic, to show the world what women are capable of."

Lord R'al'p, who had joined the group, appeared greatly amused.

'It will create a sensat'on," he ob-

"I trust it will do more: provoke discuss ion, enlighten my oppressed and down trodden sex to their rights and true mission in the world," said the lady.

"And have you a mission?" enquired E'eanor Charlton, in a soft treacherous voice, at the same time raising her glass and taking a deliberate survey of Lucy, who islt the ridicule of her position.

"Not that I am aware of," she answered with a smile. "I am a simple country girl, the daughter of a poor gentleman, and indebted to my kind cousin for a home and a protector."

All who heard approved the quiet dignity of the reply.

"I recollect you perfectly," said Mrs.
Berrington, "and shall be delighted to see you at the embassy."

Lucy regarded her relative as if to consult her wishes.

"Certainly. child, certainly!"
"Madame P shert probably will do me the pleasure of accompanying you."

The invitation was graciously scoepted, and it was henceforth understood in Schwineberg that the new comers were visitable

"What an odd creature," exclaimed Eleanor Charlton, as the strangers with

"The girl is pretty," said her brother

Alfred.

"And very unassuming," added his lordship. "Have you known her long?"

The question was addressed to Mrs. Berrington; he had not witnessed the first meeting.

"I have frequently seen her," replied

Mrs. Berrington. "Her sweet innocent a first struck me in the village church Wrsycourt. Her father I believe is po-but he has always been considered a gest

"What name did she my?" enquired Eleanor Charlton.

"It is a very good one," remarked the poer, who seemed rather interested, "and the girl is exceedingly pretty. A thousand pities she should be associated with such odd people."

The speakers shook hands and separa-

CHAPTER XX.

NE of those clever persons who never set without a motive, was Miss Charlton, and our readers we expect have already divined the one which brought her to Schwineherg: a determination to become Countess of Rislip. The acquaintance had first commenced at Municipal acquaintance had acquaint acquaintance had first commenced at Munich, been strengthened during a tour in the Tyrol, and a winter in Vienna had raised the lady's hopes to the highest pitch; still, somehow or other, the gentleman fought shy of a declaration. The world, generally exceedingly liberal in what is not it's own, had long since given him her, but his lord-ship appeared in no hurry to confirm the gift. It was even surmised that he had retreated to the out-of-the-way little capital of the grand ducal dominious to avoid further compromising himself.

It so the move proved a useless on, the lady followed him; generalship being her forte, she was not to be outflanked. When the journey was first suggested by her, the poohpoohed the idea, her brother laughed and predicted failure; both, however, submitted, much as they disliked the change. It was a strong mind controlling two weak ones.

The contest proved unequal.

The contest proved unequal. A few weeks had satisfied Eles no Charlton that it was not at Schwinebergeher world be likely to meet a rival. The Ogilive girls were passess, the Hastings prim and unfashionable. She had the field to herself till Lucy arrived, and she regarded her as a mere child; pretty—she was forced to admit that— but simp'e, unformed, no accomplishments. It would be absurd not to invite her to her ball, so excellent a foil to her own brilliant attractions.

"Beware," said her brother Alfred, when the point was discussed; 'these quiet, re-ired, simple girls are the most danger-ons." APO.

'Absurdi"

"Trust to my experience."
"Of the absurd daughters of Oxford dons Parisian grisottes, milliners, and Garman peasant girls," interrupted his sister with a look of contempt. "Lord Rislip has seen the world."

"And is beginning to get tired of it," replied the young man.

"Alfred may be right," observed her father warningly. "Great contrasts some-

It would have been too humiliating for Eleanor Charlton, who had been the belle in London, Paris, and Vienna, and half the Spas in Europe, to a imit the possibility of any such rivalry. So the visit of ceremony was paid and the invitation sent.

Lucy would fain have declined it she

Lucy would fain have declined it, she had never been at a ball and felt terrifled, but Madame Von Pishert, whose pailosophy after all we suspec: was only skin deep, in-after all we suspect was only skin deep, insisted upon her going.

In addition to the pleasure of acting the part of chaperone to her young relative, whose attractions she falt proud of, it afforded the newly married lady an opportunity of appearing in her bridal paraphernalis—orange flower wreath and Brussels lace. "What is the use of having such things she observed to her confidente Hannah.

they were to be worn only once. The grim old waiting-maid smiled. The ball proved a great success. His lordship, as if to confirm the judgement of the ambitious Eleanor, scarcely noticed Lucy; all his attentions were devoted to herself. He danced with her seven tim to the desperate annoyance of the Ogilvi and Hastings factions, who began to feel how unwise they had been to quarrel, a though neither would make the first advance to a reconciliation as yet.

The peer once again solicited the hand of Miss Charlton.

"For the cotillon," replied the haughty beauty, regarding her card. "Excuse me, my lord, I detest cotillon. Don't look so serious, and I will recommend you a partner."

"Indeed! Whom."

"The pale-looving girl you admired at the church," answered the young lady laughingly. "Miss Beacham."

"Bae certainly is pretty."
"And sentimental."

"Do you really wish me to dance with her ?"

"Of course I do," answered Eleanor, bending on him her magnificent large dark eyes. "Had I power I should command you to do so." The poer turned and walked silently

"Cose," whispered Alfred Charlton-[TO ME CONTENION.]

A PERAM

BY S. PERSON

My dream is of a flow'r-like floor
Among the roses far away;
My dream is of a sun'it space Down-sloping to a little bay where shining waters meet the la
And murmur on the golden sand.

My dream m of a woman's heart, H wever t-fed, for over true, That hath no gulls, and knows no art— My dream, my darling, is of you, and all I left behind me, deer, And have not seen for many a year!

But, ah, my dream is sweeter yet,
Of toil o'erpast and dangers dema,
Of prosp'rous wind" and white salls set,
And home and you, my darling, won!
And weary leagues of land and sea.
Can never keep my dream from me!

For Her Sake.

BY AMY RINGGOLD.

HE secret came to light oddly enough; but I must tell the story in my own

Until reaching the age of eighteen, Kathleen Erle led a singularly solitary

She had no brothers or sisters; her father was dead, and her mother, the only near relative she had living, seemed almost like a stranger to the girl, they saw each other so rarely.

The only bome she had ever known was the boarding-school and the somewhat garnish splender of first-class hotels.

To be sure she had never wanted for Her quarterly allowance was ample, her wardrobe well supplied. But every human heart has wants that annot be satisfied by flithy dress or costly

'Ah, it is a sad thing to be so desolate," she had said to herself, again and again. "How I could appreciate a happy home and kindred ties

At last Kathleen had a lover-Philip West was rich, handsome, educa-ted, and well-connected—there could be no possible objection to the match.

"I shall never be lonely again," she exclaimed, as she clung enraptured to her s lover's arm. "Ah, you do not know what it is to feel oneself homeless and friendless in the world."

The young man looked at her a little be-

No, he had grown up 14 the midst of a happy home circle, and had never experienord the same want.

"You have your mother, Kathleen," he ventured. A change swept over her pretty face: it took on a half scornful expression.

"Mother!" she repeated. "To my carr the name has but an empty sound.

speak freely of her now, Philip. My mother is not like any other woman I ever knew. She does not love me. She never

"Oh, how can you say that?"
"It is the truth. Did you ever meet my mother?—did any one of my friends, for that matter? No; she chooses to find her enjoyment apart from me. I have not se her for months. She supplies me with money, and there her oversight ends Oh, it is terrible to live in this strange way."

"It is very singular, at least," the young man said, looking at her curiously.

For the first time a vague feeling of un easiness beset him.

Might there not be something in the eccentric conduct of his affianced's mother? "You must write and tell her of our engagement," he said, after a pause. "Of course that would bring her here at

But I do not even know her addre She seems to spend her time in going from

Philip started. "Have you no means of communication with her?" he said

'I send all letters to the family solicitor, who forwards them to my mother wherever she may be. But sometimes they are weeks in reaching her. The season will be over before she could possibly join

Philip felt more and more astonished. But he would not pain his betrothed by confersing it.

The next day they were sauntering up and down, when a sudden commotion arose in the hotel grounds

Kath'een dropped her lover's arm and hasened to ascertain the cause.
"Is anything wrong?" she saked, pausing before an excited group gathering to the right of the avenue.

the right of the avenue "A woman has fainted; that's all," some one answered. Kathleen's sympathies were enlisted at

"Who is she ?" she said moving steadily forward.

"Only one of the circus women that pitched their tent on the common, this morning. I can't, for my life, imagine what she wanted here. It is no place for one of that sort."

"Let me see her. I may be able to do

The growd parted; Kathleen found her

The woman had railied somewhat, she was sitting up and looking vacantly around

Kathleen took one step forward, then stooped short and grew deadly pale, as though some one had struck her a sudden

"Mother!" she oried, just above h

There came a sharp cry from the woman's lips; she flung out her white hands in a strangely desperate gesture.

"Hush!" she gasped. "For Heaven's sake, be careful what you say and do!"

The warning recalled Kathleen to her

Her head seemed to be swinging round and round, but she managed to put on an outward semblance of composure. "Stand back and give us air," said she,

with an authoritative gesture toward the group gathered about the vine-wreathed

Then she looked into the woman's eye again. Bhe felt as if she were slowly going

"Is it you, mother ?" she whispered "Oh.

'Forgive me, Kathleen. I meant to go away again, and never let you know I had been here. I would have done it but for this sudden faintness."

The girl scarcely heard. She was white and cold After a moment's silence she added: "You are one of the circus woman. They said so. Heavens! why did I live to see this

A shudder ran through the woman's Rising, she said, with centle dignity— "I know it is hard, Kathleen. Let me go; I will never cross your path again." She passed with alow, unsteady steps "I know it is hard, Kathle from the place.

There was one smothered moan of an-nish—then all was still.

Kathleen stood as if rooted to the spot.

After some minutes had elapsed she oused herself, like one waking out of a dreadful dream

Her mother had passed quite out of sight.
The mystery that had enshrouded her life was explained at last.

She knew now why she had never had a howe or known a moth er's care.

A half hour later, Ph flip West found her sitting pallid and still on one of the rustic

Her changed looks frightened him, but she stopped his eager inquiries with a ges-

"I have a favor to ask," she said, in a low hoavse voice he had never heard be-fore. "There is a circus on the common. This afternoon I wish to go. Will you take Philip could only look his amasement.

"Certainly, Kathlen. But—"

"Don't ask my reasons for this strange request," she interrupted. "I will give them afterwards But I must go—I must! Yield to me now; it may be the last time you will find it necessary."

She scarcely knew how the interval

All was mist before her until at length a corner of the canvas was lifted, and a lady in silver-spangled drapery rode slowly into

A sudden shout of applause resounded through the tent.

"It is Mademoiselle Celeste, the most renowned bare-back rider in the world," said Philip, reading from the programme he

Kathleen held her breath. Mademoiselle Celes

There was an interval of suspense. Tae girl leaned forward involuntarily, watching with a fascinated gase every novement of her mother. Round and round the ring flew the hand-some Arabian, bearing his beautiful bur-

Paper hoops flew up like magic here and Mademoiselle Caleste's performance was about to begin. What was it that drew the woman's eyes at that instant to the deathly face of her child? She was seen to waver all at once—a terrible shrisk broke from her lips, and before any one realised what had happened, she lay bruised and bleeding in the dust; her horse was riderless.

All was excitement. As the men in the ring raised her in their arms and bore her out, Kathleen, sprung forward, with an exclamation of grief and horrer;

"She is dead!"
Something in her ince made the crowd give way.

A moment later she and Philip stood beside an extemporised couch, on which Mademoiselle Celeste lay, her gausy robus covered with blood.

oh my mether?" the orte "look up—speak to me;
your child!"
Slowly the eyes undesed; a smile parte the pallid lips.
"My darling, I am so glad , you are be

She stopped short—all at once she to remember.

'Go sway!" she wildly uttered: "leave me to suffer alone. Go, or you will be disgraced for ever."

But Kathleen fung herself beside the couch, and wound her arms around the woman's neck.

'Town you? Hever again! Don't ask

Tears fell down that pallid face like drops

"I thought that you would despise me when you knew," she said. "I thought you would turn your back. Oh, I hope God will be good, and let me die. Then you will forgive me for having diagraced you so." YOU BO. "

"Die, mother?"

'Tes. What have you and I in common? There is such a wide gulf between your way of living and that to which I am doomed. I meant there should be. I have guarded my secret jealously, even from

But here she stopped—broke down in a storm of bitter sobs.

"Mother, tell me why you choose to fellow this strange life," said Kathleen, when they had grown calmer.

"It was all I could do," came the plaintive answer. "We were once rich, my child, but I was left a pennilese widow, with you to provide for. I could not teach, and I had never learned to work; we must have starved had I tried to sew. But I was always a daring horsewoman; my opportu always a daring horsewoman; my opportu nity came—I was offered a magnificent sal-ary—I could bring you up as a laday, and— I yielded."

She hid her ince in her hands a moment— then raised it steadily.

'It has been a terrible life, darling—full of pain and torture

"Only the thought of you, honored and happy, helped me to endure it. And for your sake I kept myself free from its snares and allurements."

and allurements."

In all her life the girl's feelings had never been so deeply stirred.

She knew at last what noble self-escrifice bad been going on all these years.

'Oh, mother, mother?'' she cried, in a trembling voice, "why did you not tell me this long ago? I am not so selfish as you seem to think. Nothing shall ever part us

At first Philip West was shocked and stuened by the revelation.

But when he came to understand what martyrdom this woman had endured for her child's sake, he knelt beside her in honest admiration.

"I am prouder of you than I would be of queen," he said. "Let me call you mo-

Mrs. Earle recovered her injuries; but the wor'd has seen the last of Mademoiselle Oeleste.

Two rosy children now call her grand-mother; and Philip and Kathleen reverence her enough.

"Bulls."—These "bulls" are not all of Irish origin. It was the mayor of a Portuguese city who once enumerated, among the marks by which the body of a drowned man might be identified. "a marked impediment in his speech." General Taylor was made ridiculous for a "ime by the sentence which occurred near the beginning of his message sent to the Thirty-first Congress, as follows:- 'We are at peace with all the world, and seek to mantain our cherished relations of amity with the rest of man-kind." But Buchanan almost matched it in a speech which he made at the South, in which he said—"I do believe, gentlemen, that mankind, as well as the people of the United States, are interested in the preserva tion of this Union:" and Calhoun, commenting on the clause in the Declaration of Independence, to the effect that all men are created equal, remarked that "Only two men were created, and one of these was a Honor among thieves met its reward at a visit of the late Emperor Nicholas to a penitentiary. All the prisoners whom he questioned averred their innocence. Bored by these protestations, the Emperor cast a glance along the line of prisoners until his eye fall upon a ragged, wretched looking gypey, whom he beckened forward with the words, "Of course you, too, are here on a false charget" "Not a bit of it, your Majesty," replied the prisoner, "it is all fair and square as far as I am concerned. I stole a yony from a tradesman." "Stole a pony, did you?" said the Omr, with a laugh, and then, addressing the governor of the prison with well-assumed sternness: "Turn that good-for nothing rascal instantly out of doors. I cannot allow him to stay a minute longer in such honorable and virtuous company lest he pervert all these good, innocent people!"

MEAN FOR POULEER -Always cook the ment which for give to positive it game twice of the for food, and is more potentially. Chop I then and said it, so you do for family use. HE is with remaid when or core ment.

WHED PROTE —A quick and effectual method to destroy pinning and other weed posts on lawns is to out the plant off at the arown, and drop on the top of the root two or three drops of furueene off. The laws will no be demost by digging, and the work is at one and completely done; the root dies as surely as if streek by lightning.

Described by lightning.

Described Land,—finow molts away upon drained lands soomer than on those undersined, bease the drained solis are ready for ploughing much soomer. In Section it is instanced that the harvest is from ten to first large earlier on drained than on undrained ands. This is only one out of many advantages resulting from a good system of drain-

For House-Plants.—4 os. sulphate of ammosia; I os. nitrate of petash; I os. where sugar; I pint of hot rain water. The kid ever the cork. Use one tablespoonful to one gallon of water ones a week at first, then twice a week at intervals. Do not wet the foliage. Rever use on outtings or very young plants. Three drops every ten days will hasten blooming if in bud.

FIXING FLOWER COLORS.—This simple solution for fixing the colors of flowers may have interest: Dissolve half a gramme of sall-cytic acid in 500 grammes of heated alcohol. Through this null pass slowly the blossoms to be preserved, and shake off the drippings from them. Dry them carefully on sheets of blosting paper and do not lay them saide until perfectly dry.

THE TOAD .- The toad, which used to be The Toal.—The toad, which used to be thought a most malignant reptile, is really one of the most useful creatures a gardener can have about him. In the matter of feeding, any thing that creeps or erawis will "o for him—wood-fee, bestire, spid irs, slugs, worms, even mails with their shells being snapped up by his discrous tongue and swallowed as if by magic. Kept in a garden or a greenhouse, they will destroy an immense number of injurious insects, while doing absolutely no harm themselves.

of injurious insects, while doing-beolutely no harm themselves.

Former Destruction.—The destruction of forests in this country is said to have produced the following effects: First, the variations in temperature of heat and cold have become more sudden and intense; second, the summers are more dry and the winters more changeable, with less snow; third, the flow of our larger springs has decreased in volume, while many of the smaller ones have disappeared altogether; consequently wells have to be deepened and water-power replaced during dry seasons with steam; fourth, our rivers and streams are no longer as regular in their flow, but rise higher and more suddenly after heavy rains and become lower in dry seasons; fifth, winds sweep with greater force; that we have fewer local rains during the hot seasons, and more frequent hall storms; sixth, we have no longer the fine fruit-bearing orchards our ancestors had forty years ago.

Baienlifig and Caeini.

LAND AND WATER VELOCIPEDS .- A New Yorker has patented an improved velocipeds which is so constructed that it may be run on land and water with equal facility.

Age of Trees—It appears that the rings of trees do not always denote a year, for the blue gum tree of Australia sheds its benk twice a year; a tree recently hewn, that was known to be only eighteen years old, showed thirty-six distinct rings of growth.

HINTE —To remove paint splashed upon wincow-panes, use a bot solution of soda and rub with soft flaunci. Brass work may be brightened with a little oxalic acid, and dissolved in water and applied with a cloth or brosh. For scoreding white goods, rub well with linen rags dipped in chlorine water. Colored cottons, redye if possible, or in woolens raise a fresh surface.

WEED YOUR FLOCKS -Sell, slaughter or WEED YOUR FLOCES —Bell, slaughter or give away poor, scrawiny animals, and it will stand you in pochet. Ever sheep that yield the het vit at fleeces or the heaviest carcasses; a scrub animal will fleece rather than benefit you. A cow that eats a pound of butter a day eats no more than a beast that yields a pound a week. The best breed of hogs manufacture a maximum number of pounds of meat from a minimum number of bashels of corn.

LUMINOUS PAINT .- Not the least promis LUMINOUS PAIRT.—Not the least promising application of the new luminous paint is found in the production of a safety lamp for coal miners. It is said to give light enough for practical use, and as it contains no fire or heak, it is evident that its use is absolutely free from risk. By means of this form of lamp, in connection with blasting by compressed air, fire and the attendant danger of exploding gas might be rused out, and the most dangerous mines be made quite sais.

DETECTING FORGERIES -It is said that DETECTING FORGERIES —It is said that the Bank of France mas sincest entirely abandoned the common term in for of the camera for detecting forgeries. The sensitive plate not only proclaims forthwith the doines of the eraser or penknife, but frequently shows, under the bold figures of the forger, the sum originally borne by the check. So ready is the camera to detect inkmarks that the carte-devisite inclosed in a letter may to the eye appear without bismish, while a copy of it in the camera will probably exhibit traces of writing across the face where it has merely been in contact with the writing page.

Charger Hamps. — When one's hands are CHAPPED HARDS.—When one's hands are chapped, he is always more or less liable to absorb poisonous matter into his system—in the handling, say, of putrid meat, or in the washing of clothes from a sick room, or dressing some foul sors. Where the surface oil is deficient, it is apt to be washed off, especially with warm water, faster than it is sterested. But the difficulty is greatly increased by the alikali (some or potash) of the scap, which not only takes up the oil, but actually east through the epidermis. The best help for chapped hands is, having washed them thoroughly before retiring, to rub them over with mutton tallow and wear through the night a pair of easy setting leather gloves. Persons in whom the tendency to evap is not so strong, may keep their hands in condition by an occasional resort to this treatment. CHAPPED HANDS. - When one's hands are Card collectors piease buy seven bars Bobbins' Riestrie Soap of any grocer and write Cragin & Co., Philad's, Pa., for seven eards grads,six colors and gold, Shakspeare's 'Haven Ages, of Man." Ordinary price, S etc.

8

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

SPECTOR TEAR.

TERMS:

96.00 Pay Youl, in Advance which includes the payment of the Postage to Fee.

CLUM

One 1007 (10) Full accounts to the control of the c	_	-
Two copies can year	8
Three copies one year
Pour copies one year		-
Five copies one year
Ten copies one year	15
Twenty copies one year	25

AFAn extra copy free to a person getting up a stub of five or more. Additions may be made to clube at any time during the year at the same rate.

May Summerroom one commence at any time during the year.

CHARGE OF ADDERSS.

Subscribers desiring their address changed, will please give their former postodice as well as their present address.

HOW TO BEMIT.

Fayment for THE Poor when sent by mall should be in Money Orders, Sank Checks, or Drafts. When neither is obtainable send the money in a registered letter, at our risk. Every postmaster is required to register letters when requested.

Falling to requive the paper within a reasonable time after ordering, you will advise us of the fact, and whether you sent cach, check, money order, or registered letter.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

In every case send as your full name and address, if you wish an answer. If the information desired is not of general interest, so that we can answer in the paper, send postal eard or stamp for reply by mail. Address all letters to

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST, 78 Sansom St., Philada.

BATURDAY BVENING, FEBRUARY 12 180.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

"Last Hurros's Ward."—Chapter XVII Contermed and Coapter XVIII.
"Exz Lost Wirz."—Chapter XVIII Contin-

med, and Chapters XIX and XX
"Lasy Massens."—Chapter XXVII Continmed, and Chapter XXVIII and XXIX.

SHORP STORMS.
LABORY DEPARTMENT—Hotes, Quartes, and Firedde Chat.

MEW PUBLICATIONS.
THE WORLD OF HUMOR.
BRIG-A-BLAG.
BRIEFIFIC AND USEFUL.
FAME AND GARDEN.
FESSIONISTICS.
GRAIMS OF GOLD.
BRIFORIAIA. SAMOTUM CRAS.
ASSEMBLY TO INCOME.
BY I STREET, MISCRILLANY AND POSTEY.

A WORK-DAT WORLD.

ORK is the condition of humanity. There is no getting away from it. From the time "when Adam delved and Eve span," to labor in some way or other, with brains or hands, has been the lot of us poor mortals. It is true that some are constantly kicking over the traces, sighing for hours of idleness, and days without employment; but what are coveted periods of leisure when at ained !- more wearisome than the laborious days that have preceded them. Enset that fell fiend that thrives on broad spaces of unappropriated time, marks the man of leisure for his victim, if indeed vice that sank weed of no culture. does not usurp its prerogative Children, whose ideas of life are derived from nursery and fairy takes, usually consider a king the personification of happiness. In a'ter years they learn that the poet was right when he said, 'Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown."

"To work hard and be well paid for it," remarked one of the most eminert men of this century, "Is about the happiest lot a men can wish for."

Time is money, and most persons who come unexpectedly into possession of it, use it as the mejority of people use money, when they come into possession of a fortune. Who know not how, for nearly forty years, dear Charles Lamb was complaining of the daily drudgery of his clerical dutient How he asserted that the "wood of his deak had entered his soul." Behold him at his place on the clerk's retired list, with an annual allowance of twenty-five hundred dollars—a fortune to a man of his frugal habits. Was he happy in his emensipation? Did he sujoy the golden leisure to which he looked forward so long? Let his familiar letters to his friends—let that vivid essay, the "Superamusted Man," answer. He was far happier as a clerk than as a man of leisure, though one would think no man could have employed time better. We are aware that failing health and the less of friends must be taken in account; but his greatest trouble, after all, was plethorn of time.

"What shall I do to kill time?" is the most familiar thought of the man of leisure and means. The retired officer who made his servant wake him up every morning for the luxury of saying, "You rascal, I'm on half-pay, and haven't got to attend parade," might have given a momentary impulse to time by the incident, but the remainder of the day must have dragged heavily with him. We cannot learn too early to love work for the sake of work, to recognize remunerated labor as a blessing, and to rity those only who are overworked and underpaid.

SANCTUM CHAT.

ROTWITHSTANDING England's indebtedness to her mechanics, but one mechanical workingman has ever been honored with a burial in Westminister Abbey, and that was Graham, the clock maker.

A sweden wisely replied to an Englishman, when he asked if it was not costly to take children off the streets and highways and place them in special schools as is done in that land where illiteracy is almost unknown:—"Yes, it is costly, but not dear. We Swedes are not rich enough to let a child grow up in ignorance, misery and crime, to become a scourge to society, as well as a diagrace to themselves."

THE New York Coffee House Company, have taken an advanced step in the business, and are furnishing for a few days during the cold weather, the car drivers and conductors with free coffee. They have opened coffee places at various points, where reading, conversation, smoking, & 2, may be indulged in. The prices at these latter places are four cents a cup for coffee, and rolls one cent each. A movement to establish similar saloons has been s'arted in this city.

THE Jewish population of Jerusslem now numbers about 15 000, which is 5 000 mor than in 1878. This is thought by some to be an indication that the Jaws are intending to return in a body to the Holy Land. Several prominent rabbis have recently stated their belief that this idea is without foundation. The prevalent opinion among leading scholars of Jewish faith is that their people are accomplishing the divine mission by being scattered throughout all the nations of the earth, and in each nation witnessing for the truth.

A WRITER who has devoted some attention to the decorators and artisans of Japan, says, that the worker in metals is, without exception, the most artistic; but that all Japanese workmen and artists discard utterly the happy-go-lucky method in their work. They undergo a thorough training in sncient custom and precedent. Hand books with claborate instructions and progressive lessons are cheap and accessible to the poorest, for circulating libraries abound. From first strokes to the finished drawing, and for each class or style of design there are many elaborately illustrated works of reference.

IT sometimes seems as though the world had resched the limits of human achievement, but yet each year brings something new and wonderful. The year lately closed has seen the further developments of electricity in the production of light and motive power, and as a substitute for sunshine in the ripening of fruit; swifter methods in telegraphy; the application of the spectroscope to astronomical research; the discovery of the photophone; vigorous explora tions in Asia, in the torrid regions of Africa, and the frozen some of the polar circle, not to speak of the enlarging of our knowledge of meteorology and the manifold mechanical contrivances invented.

Two frequent recurrence of the fuel fam.

ine in places in the West and North-west. call for a solution. Coal cannot be found, and the use of wood will soon exhaust the available supply of that article. Corn is the only substitute, and must be the fuel of the future. For stoves it is experier to any other substance, hard coal alone excepted, and it is cheaper than say thing that is likely to be used for fuel. Two or three seres of corn will afford an ordinary family a year's supply of fuel; and the same corn sold in the market, and the proceeds turned into either wood or coal, will not begin to do it. Of course, this is meant of thefar Northern prairies. Corn may be used in either a wood or a coal stove without any change of grates, and make a steady, hot fire. Two bushel of corn in the ear, it is estimated, will keep a comfortable fire the coldest day in winter. Regarding the squeamishness about burning an article that is used for food one writer says pointedly: 'I would sooner have an acre of corn that can be replaced in a single year, than to burn an acre of timber that takes years to replace, even on the score of sentiment." There is common sense in this.

A nosrow merchant, in "lending a hand" on board one of his ships on a windy day, found himself at the end of an hour and a half pretty well exhausted and perspiring freely. He sat down to rest, and engaging in conversation time passed faster than he was aware of. In attempting to rise he found he was unable to do so without assistance. He was taken home and put to bed, where he remained two years; and for a long time afterwards could only hobble about with the aid of a crutch. Lets exposures than this have in constitutions not so vigorous resulted in inflammation of the lungs-'pneumonia'-ending in death in less than a week, or causing terious rheumatisms, to be a source of torture for a lifetime. Multitudes of lives would be saved every year, and an incalculable amount of human suffering would be prevented, if parents would begin to explain to their children, at the age of three or four years, the danger which attends cooling off too quickly after exercise, and the importance of not standing still after expreise or work. or play, or of remaining exposed to the wind, or of sitting at an open window or door, or of pu'ling off any garments, even the hat or bonnet, while in heat.

FOOTMEN in London are going out and footwomen are taking their place. Dining the other night in a fashionable locality, the door was opened by the latter in a most charming and becoming livery. Black and white mob cap for headdress; stand-up collar with white cravat and small pin in it rich brown cloth coat with livery buttone cut somewhat like a man's hunting coat, and a buff waistcoat with a high church collar-such was the uniform. I was so struck with the upper portion of the dress that I never thought of looking at the extremities, but I fancy my eye once got a glimpse, going upstairs, of red stockings and shoes with silver buckles During din. ner four winsome lassies, all similarly attired, waited on me hand and foot, and certainly never was a dinner more defily handed and served. Why not? Women are, by their nature, much better suited for this sort of work then men. The latter thinks nothing of eating onlons or smoking vile tobacco before serving the soup, or putting their thumbs in the gravy of one's mutton, or breathing stentorously at your ear, or perceptibly on your cranium if it lacks a covering. Besides, there is a decided economy; foot women are not taxed, nor do they eat so much.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE indulges in mrosem on "American Nobil'ty," and our universal habit of applying the word "gentleman" to every one. There is certainly an indiscriminate and often very amusing use of the word in our social intercourse, but it is one way in which the American endeavors to show his politeness. The questions recurs, who is a gentleman? Was Nero and Caligula, the infamous Norbury, George II., who abused his wife and son: or George IV., who reveled in the arms of obese dowagers and was a paragon of profanity-were these fellows gentlemen in any sense? And Pompadour, and Madame Maintenon, and the profane Sarah Jennings, and other women similarily constituted, who occupied high positions in French and English society—was they believe the beautiful bave been filled by men who was then the meanest convict in Sing Sing as high social life has been discussed by women inferior in morals and describe women inferior in morals and describe the vilest. Yet these creatures history, in biography, in voluminous cyclopedias. Only at such these edicines are pure, our beauts tree in licentiousn su, and our aspirations high sall noble, can the fine and expensive was "gentleman" and "lady" be correctly applied to human beings. The laxing phers may define the words as they please but there is no dodging the definition which rises above their own. Thus is in that the mechanic and his wise are lady and gentleman in common with Lord and Lady Brown Jones Jenkinson, who put on the plumage of peacocks to hide the thinnest of organisation.

Nunvous and superstitious people have undoubtedly been disturbed concern the prediction that this is to be the les year of the world's history, and even those who do not credit the rumors about the arrival of the judgment day of all mankind pin some of their faith to the promises of certain physical changes announced for 1881. These latter are the only matter that are worthy of any attention among ... lightened folks, and while it is not denied that some wonderful movements and processes in the outside universe will come this year and next it is not at 'all' certain that they will affect our planet in the slightest degree. There will be conjunetions of stars and eclipses, and it is understood that several comets are approaching the earth; but they are still so far away that astronomers believe they will be all broken up long before they near the earth's orbitby millions of miles. One of them is now visible by telescope, and it is believed to have changed its course already. This may take it into the sun, but if it should add its vast body to that great source of heat and light there would follow no change that could be even appreciated on our globs. Bayond these points nothing is positively known, but the general oplaion of the astronomers is that there will be no changes in the economies of the universe that will influence our atmosphere out of common, and they expect to process with their s'udies of the wonders of universal space gradually during 1881, as they have done in late years, unfolding the mysteries of the Great Architect as it is given them to comprehend them.

Ir insolence is the vire of the English aristocracy, the Christmas study of small children in big houses is enough to explain why it should be so. The better the station to which babies are borne, the more areas matically spoiled do they seem, from the first, to be; and the Christmas festivities of half the feudal mansions of the kingdon resolve themselves into the despotism of a ridiculously petted infancy. Eminer t peers, who are shrewd and resolute enough on all cther matters, display an infatuated fondness in regerd to the children of their house. They wish them to grow up brave, accomplished, beautiful; but they instil isto them the idea that the wholesome discipline of the schoolroom is only obligatory on boys and girls of an inferior order. They about in all places and at all hours, and plunge into any conversation that may be going on They express their opinion about the wine after dinner, or they correct the misconceptions which have been formed by an Under-Secretary of state as to the policy of their distinguished father. Children, if they are sufficiently precocious and pertinacious in their precocity, can make a country house perfectly insufferable. The parental idea is that, if the small boy's brought up in the atmosphere of political gossip and ideas, he may rival the great statesmen. There is almost a mania just now among the present, past, or fu Cabinet Ministers to be accompanied public occasions by the political schoolboy. It reminds one very much of the voget which obtained extensively a couple of years ago, and which impelled many your ladies never to be seen abroad with pug or a toy-terrier, or a ridiculously outdressed infant. Tutors and school-se ters complain that this organised disti tion fatally interferes with their best-set

THE DATE THAT COULD NOT BE.

BY BENAM MULBOR CHAIR,

Deep in the vale, afar from every beholder, In the May morning my true love same stient we set, her head upon my shoulder, Fondly we dreamed of days about to be; Softly we talked of days about to be,

Deep in the vale the rain falls colder and colder, Safely she sleeps beneath the churchyard

Tet still I feel her hand upon my shoulder— still, still I dream of days that could not be, still, still I weep for days too sweet to be.

LADY MARGERIE.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "OLIVIA," "BARBARA GRAHAM," MTC., MTC.

CHAPTER XXVII.-(CONTINUED.)

II on don.

the 100

Y dear Helena," said Lady Margerie,
"it is totally unnecessary, and a dangerous attempt. Now that our poor Blanche is gone, of course the aftair is so clear. You will be amply proyided for, and—"

vided for, and—"
"You and Isabel also," said the countees, quietly. "But, Margerie, I have reasons to suspect thet there was another will made at the time of poor Cecily's marriage that would be unpleasing to us all; and therefore, you see, we shall be safer and more likely to remain in comfort and peace by acting in concert. You understand, Margerie?"
But Lady Margarie 314

But Lady Margerie did not understand, and, what is more, did not approve of this new phase of affairs. She asked for a day for covaideration.

"As you please, Margerie," said the countess; "but I warn you that you can neither hasten nor hisder the matter. I wish to treat you as my sister, as the sister of my dying husband, as the mother of the heirers of St. Clair should be treated; if you will not act with me, I must act without you."

'Hush, Helena, hush," said Lady Mar ge ie, smilingly, 'you must be aware that much will depend on my concurrence. Any will made without it I shall contest—always contest, and without any qualms or remorse; but, if you will wait twenty-four hours I will give you my answer; mean-while you can make the necessary prepara-

"As you will, Margerie," said the countess; 'but it may be that you will repent it," she added; and that closed the

Laty Margerie had occasion to go to Newport that day, but on the next day, she met her sister in law with a cordial face and

"Helena," she began, "I have considered "Helena," she began, "I have considered your proposal. It is, on the whole, fair and tangible; but I have one condition to make,—you must allow Doctor Fitspat rick to be present. His known skill may be of service in case of emergency, and, what is more, I should like his medical teatimony in case of the worst."

"Certainly, Margerie," said Lady St. Clair, "you have a right to invist on one witness at least devoted to your cause; and I fear authing from his testimony."

I fear cothing from his testimony."

Lady Margerie did not quite like the extreme gentleness of the true, the confidence of the manner; but she could scarcely be so unressenable as to of ject to so cordial an acquiescence with her request.

The day came which was to be so important to the interests of the house of St. Clair. It was one that appeared almost intended by the Heavens to be of no ordinary solemnity, and importance. A thunder. solemnity and importance. A thunder-storm, most unusual in the latter days of November, opened the morning, and was succeeded by rain and hail, which, after two hours' violence, ended in an outbreak of sunshine and almost summer heat that made the atmosphere oppressively heavy. But, whether from the atmospheric change, or from some inexpressible cause, the in valid earl appeared to be strangely roused from his apathy.

The earl being led into the room and seated in his easy chair, the doors were again thrown open, and the counters, Lady Margerie, and Isabel, appeared; and from another door in that extensive library came together, and apparently unconnected with the others, Dr. Fispetrick and one of the most emisent of the London counsel. Lord St Clair's eyes wandered from one to the other with a strange, restless look he turned to the counters, like a child ap pealing for help, but that lady passed him with a smile of contented and encouraging kindness, and placed herself with her sister and niece in the back ground, half concealed by a curtain. Mr. Pleydell, the family lawyer, was the first to open the family lawyer, was the new proceedings.

"My noble and respected friends," he be gan, "I have a singular and responsible duty to perform this morning, which will, I hope, by means of your friendly co operation, he made a straightforward and plain one. It is, my friends, to read to you and request your testimony to the fresh will and testament about to be executed by my mobile client, under very possibler clearm stances; first, from the delitate health of the earl; next, from the meanful and extraordinary circumstances under which that hat copy of the dispositions introde by him was set saide; and lastly, from the nature of the will that it is his pleasure to make at this junction. Still it is, on the other hand, supported by these new features in the case,—the earl's physicians have pronounced him ab'e to execute and understand a new will, in spite of a strong and unconquerable impression under which he labors, and the crunsel, whose advice and co operation I have b'en se fortunate as to secure, hearn the same testimony as to the possibility of such a will being valid; and, to insure the family from any painful and disagreeable litigation or discussion after the necessity of proving and acting on this will, which, please Heaven, may be very distant, we propose to read it, and have it signed before the persons who are alone interested in the disposal of the property. And first, I would request my friend Doctor Bul'ivan, and also the celebrated for cologist, Doctor Fitspatrick, whose presence we also have the advantage of this time, to question my noble client, should they deem it necessary, as to the knowledge that he possesses of the the advantage of this time, to question my noble client, should they deem it necessary, as to the knowledge that he possesses of the fact he is about to perform."

"My dear lord," said Dr. Sullivan, turning to the earl, "is it your desire to make a will, that shall express the way in which you wish your property to be disposed of, after it pleases Heaven to take you hance?"

The earl nodded. He could comprehend the quiet, distinct, gentle utterances of his k nd physician, but the effort of speaking was too disagreeable for him to attempt it. Then Dr. F ispatrick drew nearer, as if to watch more narrowly each look and action watch more narrowly each look and action of the patient.

"And I would ask you, my lord, once more," said he, "whether you would wish your property and estates to be possessed and enjoyed by your sister, Laiy Margerie, and after her by your niece, the sole daugh ter and natural heiress?"

The earl shivered visibly, and a look of more intense disgust and loathing came over his features tuan it could have been believed that his patient withered face could have worn. His eyes looked stern and irritated, his cheeks flushed, and his lips, after working as if to conquer some great impediment, formed with difficulty, but still unmistakeable distinctness, the word "No."

Lady Margerie exchanged looks with her daughter, that plainly expressed, 'Poor, misguided man'.'

"Is there any one else that you wish to inherit it, my lord?" asked Dr. Sulli-

Again Lord St. Clair's lips moved, but this time the effort was greater, and the ut-terance feebler and less dutinct. There was no question as to the word pronounced;

it was— Blanche."

The party exchanged glances. Mr. Pley-The rarty exchanged glances. Mr. Fley-dell said, in a voice too quiet to be fully understood or noticed by the earl. "There is a delusion I know, but still not enough to affect the mind in other respects, as I thick the remainder of the proceedings will

"You mean, my dear lord," said Dr. Sullivan, "that, had your grand daughter been living, you would wish her to be the heiress of your property ?"
The earl nodded.

But," continued Dr. Sullivan, "as she,

"But," continued Dr. Sullivan, "as she, unhappily, is no more—"

He paused, for the earl s eyes flashed angrily with a flerce light.

"But" resumed the physician, "if she prowed to be no more, then is the way in which you would wish it to go about to be stated in the will drawn up?—you understand that my dear lord?"

Again the monosyllable "It"

The physician turned from the chair, with a look of satisfaction, that said plainly, "You see, his comprehension extends thus

'You see, his comprehension extends the far."

Dr. Fitspatrick now advanced with a bland sir, that did not appear to have th same influence or weight with the invalid, for he shrunk from him and turned away, so far as his palsied limbs would permit—a gesture that was not lost on the acute London counsel, Adolphus Stuart.

"He associates me with the young lady's death," cheerved Dr. Fitzpatrick, to th near him; "a common weakness with chil-dran and sick persons." Then he advanced Then he advanced cren and sick persons." Then he advanced still nearer to the chair, with his face turned from the guests, and toward the earl, but Mr. Smart here for the first time interfered "Doctor Fi'spatrick will pardon me, I am sure," he said, courteously, "if I sug-gest that the whole scene and dialogue should be expreed to the persons present Even a look, a gesture may be significent in a case like this."

Doctor Fitspatrick bowed. If he re-sented the interference, it was certainly not apparent in his quiet and unmoved fea-

"I have but one question to put to the noble earl," he resumed, gently; "and that I think is of too vital importance to the case for it to be deemed irrelevant or impor-tunals, We can scarcely deem it a fit state of mind to make a disposition of large and important property, when the testator actually supposes a ledy to be still living who revisited at least five menths age." Then turning to the earl, but still permitting the faces of both to be fully watched by the persons present, he mid. slowly and distinctly, "My lord, may I ask, do you be lieve that your grand-daughter, Miss Blanche St. Clair, is still living?"

The rarl's withered face lightened, tears came spontaneously from his eyes,—they always did at his grand daughter's name,—and then he said, with far more case and facility than he had yet spoken "Yes."

A thrill of half surprise, half-pity, mingled, perhaps, with some more painful feelings, ran through the company at these words. The countes, Ledy Margerie, and Isabel, were all mute,—the first-named lady motionless; not a gesture or trace of surprise and emotion agitated her frame at the strange declaration that had so startled the rest of the small party. The physicians exct anged glances—Mr. Pleydell noticed their expression.

"It appears to me." said he. "that this

"It appears to me," said he, "that this "It appears to me," said he, "that this only strengthens our case, gentlemen. It was avowed that our client was laboring under the full impression that Miss St. Clair would re-appear, either from his idea that she is merely absent, or some more serious delusion. In any case, when you have heard the will, I think that you must confess that there is nothing in that fact that should render it obnoxious to his relatives or injure its validity, should she choose to sign it in their presence. And, mark me, we will ascertain his full comprehension of each particular, ere we re prebension of each particular, ere we request his signature and your consent to the witnessing of the act."

The lawyer then proceeded to read the preamble in the usual monotonous tone, which marks that mechanical part of legal which marks that mechanical part of legal business, and then he went on firmly, and slowly, and distinctly, turning carefully to the earl as he read each word.

"I give and bequeathe to my grand-daughter, Violet Bianche Mortimer St. Clair, the whole of my personal and unentailed property, subject to the following legacies:—To my dearly beloved wife, Hei ens St Clair, I give and beq"eath the sum of fifty thousand pounds, over and above ber jointure of ten thousand pounds per annum; the said jointure to be paid out per annum; the said jointure to be paid out of the estates of St. Clair, Merivale, and of the estates of St. Clair, Merivale, and Fernibank, as arranged by our marriage settlement. To my sister, Lady Margerie Lisle, I give and bequeathe the sum of thirty thousand pounds, to be paid to her one twelvemonth after my decease. To my servants who shall have been with me aftern my servants and least of one thousand. fifteen years, legacies of one thousand pounds each. To those who shall have been with me ten years, five hundred pounds each. To those who have been with me five years, one hundred pounds each; and to Sir Rupert Pelham, a mourning ring, of the value of fifty pounds. To my friends, Doctor Dirkson and Doctor Sullivan, one thousand pounds each, and mourning rings of the same value as Sir Rupert Pelham's."

Then came legacies to various charities. And then Mr. Pleydell cleared his voice and once more paused, after receiving the assent of the earl to the whole testament thus read. There could be little doubt that it was comprehended.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

HE legacy to Lady St. Clair received a sad and pitcous, but evidently satisfied smile; that to Lady Margerie a slighter to Sir Rupert Pelham, were briefly but sat-isfactory assented to; but the trifling be-quest to the young man brought a smile as near to derision as the earl's feeble features could wear.

Dr. Sullivan and his colleague exchanged yet there had been little to displease even Alexander Fitspatrick in the dispositions of the will. And besides, the end was not

Mr Pleydell drank a glass of water ere he proceeded with the codicil to the docu

"And it is my will and pleasure that no legacies shall be paid, save those to the serlegacies shall be paid, save those to the servants, till two years after my decease, and that the estates shall be held in trust by my executors till that time; and if my grand-daughter, Violet Bianche Mortimer St Ciair, shall not re-appear before that time, then the whole shall be paid by my executors, and the residue of my unentailed and personal estates shall be kept in trust, and the income paid to the charities they may select for the next ten years, but no portion shall go to any one of my natural relatives shall go to any one of my natural relatives in any degree. And should my grand daughter, Violet Blanche Mortimer St. Clair, re appear during those ten years, the whole shall at once revert to her, for her sole and undivided and independent use, subject to the restrictions afore-ramed."

Mr. Pleydell ceased reading. Lady Margerie's lips parted; she was about to speak, when a warning look from Dr. Filspatrick stopped her.

The earl had listened with ovident interest to the world! Anything relating to his grand-daughter had always power to which his dormant faculties, and when Mr. Playdell acked him again on to his meant to the will, his feeble head aided a courtal again to the attempt to prosounce the word "year" more distinctly than woul.

"Are all present satisfied I" said Mr. Playdell.

dell.

"No," came clear and firm from Lady Margerie, in spite of the rapid and watning gesture of his hand; "no."

"And may I ask on what ground?" said the lawyer, quietly.

"On one and every ground," was the re-

"You mean that you don't the compe-tancy of your brother, to make a will?" saked Mr. P. sydell, in the quiet, legal tone asked Mr. P.eydell, in the quiet, legal tone he had before assumed.

Lady Margerie glanced round the room;
she saw the earl's eyes rleaming on her with almost a ferocious look of emming and suspiciou; she saw the cool keen gree of the counters, the surprise and wonder of the lawyer, and the more than amoyease of Dr. Fitspatrick. But the die was cast. Her own interest was at rake. The game she had boldly opened must be played out; and her resolution was taken.

"I saw-on every ground" she said.

her resolution was taken.

"I say—on every ground," she said, calmly, rising and advancing to the table where they sat. "First, that the will is framed entirely on a delusion. The strong affection of my brother for his grand-daughter has induced him to draw up that daughter has induced him to draw up that will with an evident snimus toward those who he presumes will profit by his death; he deludes himself through his belief—set unusual in such cases—that she is still living. Secondly, I object on the ground of the ratter injustice of a will that separates in any case the large unentailed from the smelier entailed estates of St. C'air

"In any case," repeated Dr. Frapatrick.

half involuntarily.
"Yee, in any case," was the respons 'Of coarse the presumption of my niece's lite is too great an absurdity to be entertained for a moment. I shall oppose the will, or rather this base subterfuge for a will, to the very last shilling of my means,

and till my last breath."

Mr. Pleydell bowed. Mr. S'uart mid nothing, and Dr. Sallivan and Dr. Dickson exchanged meaning and deprecating

At a sign from the countess the lawyer now advanced to Lord St Clair's side with the will, and a pen, dipped in the inkstand before him.

"My lord," said he, "once more I ask you whether it is your pleasure to sign this

The earl bowed. "It is your wish-your free wish ?" said the lawyer.

The earl inclined his head once more.

more.

"Mark me, gentlemen, and you, Lady Margarie," continued the lawyer, 'I again ask the earl in your presence, whether any influence has been used—whether there is any reason, save his own desire, for the disposition he has made?"

Mr Pleydell turned to the earl, and repeated the words slowly and distinctly. Lord St. Clair shook his head, and tried again to speak. "Blanche," was the only sound that issued.

"It is a monomania," said Lady Marge-rie, scornfully. "The persistence in this injustice must at last unlock my tongue. The young lady thus deeply mourned, thus madly changed into an unhallowed idol, even while her memory is yet fresh, was no rightful heiress of St Ciair,—she was the illegitimate daughter of the unfortunate Lady Cecily St Chair; and it was sorely from a regard for the honor of our house, and the feel ngs of my only brother, that I refrained from protesting against he cruelty that persisted in training and educating the poor girl as if she were indeed the legitimate and rightful descendant of the deluded grand parents, who were thus mistakenly indulgent to the errors of one, and the misfortunes of another, of the two female de-scendants of the line."

The countees listened with flashing eyes and a flaming cheek to this long and rapi ly desivered speech. For a moment she emed scarcely able to restrain the passion that filled every nerve; and the speciators of the scene were inclined rather to credit the statement of Lady Margerie, from the evident agitation of her sister in law; and besides, the strange disappearance of Lady Croily, the true record of her marriage the death, the advert of the infant beiress, and the absence of any living relative on her father s side that ever claume her father s side that ever transfer actory of with her, were all rather confirmatory of Lady Margerie's statement, even to those had loved and admired the infancy and the maturer girlhood of the decessed girl. But Lady St. Clair's silence and am only lasted for a moment -she to a from her seat, and walked stradily and calmly to the table where Lady Margerie stood, and where Mr. Picydell was still endeavoring to explain to the earl the place where

"Margerie Liaie," said the countess,
"from this hour the last spark of reluctanes to work out the plans that have been long integrater of the first Lody St. Older I am not suspensible by hived and hirth; but at east the was your nearest kin after your rewards the after your whose safety, may be, would have lain in he very diagrace and stigma of which you peak—for her I ray, that the, and none other, was the beloved, and rightful, and tole helress of her mother's rights, her resulfather's title and estates; and if there is not not be the contest and if there is the tolers and estates; and if there is the tolers are tolers. tice in heaven, or power on earth, no rill profits by her injuries—her unis justice in heaven, or power on earth, no one will profits by her injuries—her un timely fide."

Lady Margerie qualled under the stern look of her sister in law.

"Then there is war between us, Lady St. Chair," she said.
"To the death—at least to fair and law ful death, Margerie Link," replied the

The earl's lips quivered, and his hands moved restless y, during that quietly spoken but abarp c licquy. Then he took the per still offered him by Mr. Pleydell, and appeared about to sign in the appointed place. There was a taper burning on the table near, ready for the affixing of the created seal after the signature. Lord St. created scal after the signature. Lord St. Clair too't the pen. He frame seemed as it were galvanised into life; but it was only for a minute. His eyes were fixed on Lady Margerie's angre cold eye, her bitter scornful lip. He pointed to the taper. The counters, who marked his every sign, placed it near him. In another minute the trembling patient fingers held the parchment to the flames, and it blased up till it threatened the miety of the withered fingers that granued it so tensciously.

grasped it so tenaciously.

"Blanche, Blanche—all," he said, in a faint struggling tone, and fell back exhausted in his chair

"You hear, Margerie Lisie?" said the and your own broth r's voice condemns your slander, your cupidity, your crime." Lady Margerie answered no hing for one brief moment; then she said bitterly, "My own brother's hand has destroyed the inquitous deed that deprived both my child and myself of my rights. There can be no will, you can see clearly, gentle-

"There is real, free, spontaneous action, gentlemen," said Mr. Pieydeli, glanding at his brother lawyer and the phy-

"I fear that is useless, our law not being in a state to take a will from hearsay," ob served the counsel composedly. "Pity that so charitable and munificent a bequest should be destroyed," observed Dr. Bullivan, as he saw Dr. Dickson's grave, questioning face fixed on Lady Mar gerie's heated features.

"May I request you all to withdraw?"
said the countess, who was the only person apparently unmoved by the strange conclusion to the scene "It is better not to exhaust the arl by any more conversa-tion in his hearing at present "

Lady Margerie and the gentlemen could scarcely refuse a request that was urged by the trembling pallor and closed eyes of the patient, and yet the sister of the invalid and her adviser were the last to leave the

Dr. Fitspatrick with bland sympathy in his face, Lady Margerie with bitter triumph in hers, stood for a minute lingering at the

"Have I to request your absence a recond

"Have I to request your absence a recond time?" said the countees, eternly.

"I have a right to remain near my own brother." said Ledy Margerie, coldly.

"You have no right to enter this house so long as your brother is still lord and master here," replied the countees. "Woman, be warned in time; or you may bitterly repent your hardihood."

"Laty St. Clair, at least permit me to suggest that I could materially relieve the suffering of the earl." said Dr. Fitspatrick, urging Lady Margerie from the room, and few steps hims

"I trust I shall not have to repeat my re quest." was her reply as she turned to the earl, without even deigning to see whether her orders were obeyed, and she whether her orders were obeyed, and she rang a bell that was placed on a table near him. Before that summons could be answered, the two considerates had left the

"What next?" asked Dr. Fitspatrick quickly, as Lady Margerie led the way to the suite generally given up to her

"What next?" said the lady, smiling triumphantly. "Way, all that I most de sire, more than I had dared to hope. If my brother dies without a will, all will come to me, you see,—all save the widow's share.

Don't you understand?"

"Are you so very sure, Lady Margerie ?"
mid Dr. Finspetrick.
"Why not?" she asked.

These is another condition, in the st of which you will have lost even handsome bequest made to you," he re-

"And pray what is that!" saked Lady

Lody Margario first stared intently at im, and then she burst into a hollow

"What do you mean ?" she ash "I cannot compredoctor made no reply. "I cannot comprehend you," said the lady engrity. "It is no time for fool's jests and equivoques."

Dr. Fitspatrick looked at Lady Margarie with a gase she could not interpret It was at once defiant, pitying, and triumphant.

"Lady Margeria," he said, quietly, "I have done your bidding, I have nearly accomplished f'r you all that you desire. It only remains for you to be guided in some degree by one who has, perhaps, more experience, and who understands more fully then you do the workings of the engines which you, in comparative ignorance, have set in motion. And I tell you again, that I am not so fully satisfied as your self about the young girl's utter disappearance."

You surely have not played me fals e ?"

dcubt you suggest ?'
'I do,'' he replied.
'Then I pro-ounce you utterly treacher. ous, and unworthy of your promised share of the plunder hat you claimed, 'ex-claimed Lady Margerie passionately "Yes, Doctor Prepatrick, I say plunder, for what I have done for the good of my child for the preservation of her natural rights, and the reclaiming the name and the estates of St. Clair from the grasp of an illegiti-mate and obscurely born girl, you have merely shared it from love of power and "Of Lady Margerie Linle," mid the physician, c olly. "My dear lady, you are a far greater fool than I imagined. Don't you see how entirely you are in my power ! -how far from wise, or even same is your present conduct?'

"You forget that you are as much in the mase as I am," she replied. "If I come to grief, you will suffer also; if I go to prison, you will be hanged."

"Not altogether, madam," he replied, coolly; 'not alt gether. It can easily be proved, that while you required me to finish the young lady by poison. I saved her lif-; that while you had an absolute motive for des ring her death, I-

He stopped suddenly. Lady Margerie auddered. "And," continued the doctor, there are other things in which I had no share, Lady Margerie, or rather which I counterbalanced and furnished an antidote to your crimes. It would be easy to prove that you; the aunt of the girl, the aister of the man whom her loss has rendered a halfliving, half deadened corpse, went to iar deeper, far more revolting lengths in crime than I would have dared or couns iled. Listen," said he, and he whispered a few words in her ear.

"It was for the safety of both of us; it was to ensure the secrecy, the certainty of success," see pleaded, as her face grew paler and paier with hatred and suppressed fury, while her mouth quivered with mingled rage and terror. "Well, do as they will," she said, "they cannot altogether baffle me. They cannot prove that Blanche St. Clair was legitimate. They dare not "

"Hush, hush!" said the physician.
"There is no doubt whatever that you have made an error—a great, but we will hope not irretrievable error. Still with my ass'stance, if you are true to me, if you p ace yourself under my d rection; obey my wishes, follow my directions, and above all, keep to your engagements, and grant me all that you have conditioned for;— then, and not till then, Margerie Lisie, we may carry out what you have wished so much to obtain."

"But the counters ?" said Lady Margerie feeling instinctively the i fluence of that master will, that unbending spirit. "What does that cool composure mean? She hates me; she idolises Bianche; her all depends on her husband's life; and yet she is calm, and even triumphant, during the woman."

"The Countees of St. Clair is not an ordinery woman," said the physician, coolly. "However, I agree with you that there was something very peculiar in her manner and conduct, and it is partly from that circumstance that I wish you to be guided by me in this crisis; nay, I insist on obediance, or you know the alternative."

It was the beginning of punishment for the wretched woman, the first dawning of the retribution that infallibly follows crime —that the partner in her guilt, the agent she had employed as a mere subordinate, a paid servant in the guilty drama, should thus urn on her, and become her master, and assert an iron rule such as she had never, in her earlier days, known or obeyed But she was old enough and experience enough in her vocation to 'bide her time, and wa't for a certain hour to assert her own position, her own superiority to the low born yet daring spirit whom she had called to her aid. She mused for a few

"Perhaps you are right," she mid,—"we must not together; and yet, remember, we ought fully and freely coulde in each other. You know something that you are concenting from me, Alexander Pitspatrick,—you cannot deceive we in that."

"And you did something that you concealed from me, Margerie Lisle," he replied. "Come, no more of this idle recrimination: we want and that at crimination; we must act, and that at

The door then closed for some hours on the guilty pair.

CHAPTER XXIX.

LARGE, half derayed house stood A some two miles from St. Clair, under the very shade of the magnificent Culver Cliff—a building that had been almost coeval with the half ruined church of Bt. Helen's, which lay near the well known ferry, between the village and Pembridge. It was ortainly on the edge of the large estates of St. Clair, yet many of the house hold at the Castle were actually unonactions of its existence; but for the last fortains. night it has been occupied by a stranger, who was rarely seen in the village of Pem-bridge or on the neighboring shore. Some said that he was pacing the white sands on a moonlight night, or climbing the high mount beneath which the fair bay of Sandown lay sleeping, like the blue I alian waters of the southern Neapolitan lake; but as the inhabitants of the primitive spot were usually in bed at the sunset hour n Summer, and at the latest soon after curfew in Winter, those from whom the report came were deemed acrapegraces, hardly worthy of credence.

Some children, playing on the shore near the secluded dwelling, had declared that they saw two ismals figures enter the house, and, after remaining an hour or two, leave it in the same mysterious way in which they had come, and disappear round the Oulver Point, in the direction of Sandown Sometimes a strangely clad figure, that cer-tainly could not be the gentlemanly stranger whom the very little ones looked upon with awe and as'onishment, would turn from the door after the mysterious females. and close and lock the enchanted portal from all unwarranted intrusion. Such were the reports about the new tenant of the dwelling that had so long remained empty and almost forgotten in that secluded spot. But they excited comparatively little attention, and the unsophisticated peasants heeded little the proceedings of one who neither concerned them nor interfered with their occupations or interests. One elderly female and ner son attended to the wants of the stranger; but the woman was deaf, and the lad apparently spoke some foreign tongue, and could scarcely make himself understood, even for the few errands on which he was sent

Thus had passed two weeks without any change in the daily routine of the stranger's life, when at the usual hour, or perhaps somewhat later than was customary, the two females made their appearance, after a light tap at the door, were admitted by the lad into the dwelling.

The door opened directly into an apart ment of rather large dimensions, as often happens in the rustic old fash-ioned houses of ancient date. The walls were stuccoed of a whitish brown, and lined with casts, busts, and bas reliefs, and figures of various kinds. In the middle of the room was a large old fashioned couch; but the ladies quickly passed through this apartment to one much larger, and very peculiar in appearance. It had no ceiling. was paved with brick, and the light came from a high, huge, square window, that ap peared as if sunk in the thick thatch of the gable end of the dwelling. More casts were ranged round the naked walls of this vast room, that might, to judge from its size and unfinished appearance, have been intended for a granary, instead of a depository for graceful works of art.

Through this room was a narrow passage, and then an open door, leading to a private court, and on the other side of the court were the open doors of two other rooms, one of which appeared to hold a carpen'er's bench, another a forge. And through an opening by the side of these two rooms the sea could be seen, rolling and surging, and the white sails glittered in the pale Winter sunshine with dazzing brilliance.

The youth who preceded the ladies led the way across the parrow court, and opening the door with a key, ascended a narrow wooden bridge to an apartment answering to the one into which the visitors had at first entered.

The walls were here of a rale, beautiful tint of green. There was a large oriel window, and the floor was covered with a thick, green carpet; on one side were a green ounging chair, and two or three others similarly fitted; an antique cabinet of some value, a richly gilded mirror, a table, and a value, a richly gilded mirror, a table, and a large and handsome piece of furniture, half "whatnot" half table, on which was deposited various portioliss full of drawings in various stages. Then there were some book cases, well filled, a Oremona violin, and everywhere casts, drawings, and sketches. But the youth hastily walked across this room to an inner apartment the door of which at once opened, and fiir Evan Lestie made his appearance.

"Good morning." said he to his visitors.

"I feared something had detained you; yo are usually so punctual. Excuse my a cfiering you my hand; it is dawled wi clay. Oarlo, admit no one on any prote whatever."

The room in which the young baronst received his visitors was of the same size as the preceding, but less elaborately farmished and comfortable. The floor was bare. A few chairs and a table, and conbare. A few chairs and a table, and con-trivances for a sculptor's work, constituted the furniture. In the middle of the room, on one of the heavy platforms, was a tall mass of wet dark clay, which bore about as little resembance to the figure of a women as can well be imagined. On the plain solid table stood a figure in the same wat clay, and about two feet high, which was even beautiful. even beautiful.

ABO

1711

enke

The hose of the nois ur c

dacka ple, a rible the m

plied ng fi Natio

Rive

writi

being the n one p one o up th turn epot canoe

I will destre warr selve and s kets count
nary

anoth I hav

with inche to pie Ar

thing

Dece

Al

kets balls

tory voice

con to nie ht river.

death solf t

medi the I

how |

17

dain Internal Internal

"I voice and

even beautiful.

It is only a few weeks since that we described Sir Evan Lealie, and yet in that short time he had changed. He has grown pale—very pale. Perhaps it might be the effect of his long, dark-green working robe or blouse, but his features are sharp, and even sunken. The fine ruddy frumess of the young man's chock is gone; but, in compensation, the large eyes shine with wonderful brilliancy, and the mouldings of the brow are deepened, and a certain classic severity is about the lines of the mouth. Yet the expression is full of sweetness, and Yet the expression is full of sweetness, and of a far higher cast than was the case in former years. Has he been ill? or is it the effect of severe study? Buch were the thoughts that the younger of the two visitors, who now entered the room, indulged, as she gased at him through her

'I feared we were late," mid the older and shorter of the two; "but we fancied we were noticed, and my lady did not like to enter till we were quite alone."

"It was scarcely necessary," said the young man, amiling. 'The good folks about here have but little curiosity. Indeed, it seems a characteristic of the island to allow every one to come and go unobserved and unquestioned.

He had gone on as if to give time for the younger and apparently superior of the two girls to compose herself ere he addressed her; then he turned to her with an air of even chivalrous respect.

"I cannot at fill; ently thank you," said he, "for giving me your aid in carrying out my object."

"It was too sacred not to command sympathy from me, ' said the sweet, clear voice of the long lost Violet.

"And no one but you could forward it," he replied. "It is enough if you and the relatives think so," she replied, her large eyes meeting his with a calm, half-reproving

It seemed to check any attempt of Bir Evan's to learn more than she chose to tell. He was a periect gentleman, and the very loneliness and unprotected state of the young girl were sufficient to guard her from the slightest curiosity or any uture advance on his part. So he quietly turned to the ecompanion, a handsome but somewhat peculiar looking girl, with features of great beauty, but still an expression half furtive, half ashamed, and entirely depressed, that marred it s loveliness; and to the practiced eye there was an evident and unmistakable absence of the refinement that is the greater charm of beauty.

"May I ask you to sit down in that cormer?" he said. "I can give you some picner? 'he said. "I can give ; tures or a book to amuse you.

The girl accepted the portfolio, probably to have a better opportunity of watching what was going forward; and then Violet went into the ante-room, but re-appeared after a short interval in a simple dress of white cashmere, falling to the feet; a go'd cincture confined the waist. She looked gloriously beautiful as she seated herself in that chair, immediately under the pure, modified light streaming in from the large window. An angel in its pure white robes could scarcely have been more lovely than the half spiritualized girl at that moment Sir Evan's heart throbbed, and his hand could barely command the steadiness essential to his art.

(TO RE CONTINUED.)

An "old tar" has recently prepared a hand-book of nautical terms for the use of persons who intend to follow the sea. In order to correct popular belief, our author gravely asserts that the borths on board ship do not necessarily add to the consus. The hatchways are not hens' nests. weight of the ship is not the extent of her avoirdupois. The boatswain does not pipe all hands with a meerschaum. The ship does not have a wake over a dead calm. The swell of a ship's side is not caused by dropsy, nor is the taper of a bowsprit a tallow candle. The hold is not the vessel's grip. The trough of the ship is not does not indication of its rank. The buoy is not the captain's son. The mess buoy is not the captain's son. The men are not beat to quarters with a club. Ships are never boarded at hotels. The bow of a ship is no evidence of politeness. A sailer's stockings are never manufactured from a yarn of his own spinning. The sails of a ship are not made by an anotioneer, not are the stays constructed by a millines. AT A LOOKING-GLASS.

BY J. CHAMBE

loved thee well in "salad days," I loved thee well in "saind days," Forever flown,
O taithful friend, whose housest face
Eaflects my own.
For do I mete thee seamter praise, (Sincerity is hard to find.)
For Time has distanced in the race,
And left me nanting far behind—
Heigh-bo:
Another weary mile or so.

Now well I recollect the hours
I used to spend
I need to spend
I need to spend
I years gone by,
My trusty friend.
Oh, April youth! Oh, sun and showers !
Frsy, don't expect me to confess
Now long I took to knot my tie,
The day that I proposed to Jess.
(Alsok!
She boxed my ears—and married Jack.)

And now I wear—well, never mind.
(Fime's rutbless shears!)
And ses—why, bless you, she's been dead
These twenty years!
The fruit of Life is gone—the rind
Is somewhat bitter to the tasts.
Oh, vain regrets for pleasures fied—
For days when I rossessed—a waist.
But stay;
I'll brush the sorry imps away.

Ah. if some scientific man
Would but invent
A looking glass wherein to find Ose's moral bent,
A tell tale mirror—there to scan
Each petty failing that appears—
The cynic furrows of the mind,
That gather with increasing years.
Ah, well,
I fear those glasses would not—sell.

The Avengers.

BY A. T. WILBUR.

NE of the most daring chieftains of whom we remember having read, was an Algorquin or Adirondack. This tribe of Indians, at the time of the first stdement of Conada, were found upon the anks of the St. Lawrence.

The chieftain to whom we have alluded. The chieffain to whom we have alluded, whose name was Paskaret, could never for get the stain which the victories of the Iroquois had left upon his people, and with our of his boldest warriors devoted him elf o what he considered the sacred duty of wiping the stain from the national honor. "What shall be done, great chieffain!" asked one of the avengers of the Adiron.

sked one of the avergers of the Adiron dacks. "The Iroquois are a numerous peo-ple, and we are still smarting under the ter-rible wounds which our honor received at he memorable battle of Trois Riviere."

"When you speak of Trois Riviere, you have my cheeks to burn with shame," replied Paskaret, shaking his long and quivering finger towards the country of the Five Nations "It is the memory of the Trois Nations 'It is the memory of the Trois Riviere that is turning my hair gray, and writing wrinkles upon my brow. Brother stengers, you have asked what we shall do, being only five in all—only one to each of the nations of our enemies. I will tall you bee plan which I have thought of by which to punish the Iroquois. I have learned by one of my spies that five canoes have gone up the Three Rivers, and will probably return in a few days and pass over the same pot where we were deleated. Each of the cances contained ten of our enemies. Now I will reveal to you a way in which we can destroy them all. There are five of us—one warrior to each canoe. Let us provide ourselves with muskets—three for each man, and ammunition in abundance. Three mus-kets to each warrior, in our hands, will sount the same as fifteen armed in the ordinary manner.

"But, avengers, this is not all; I have another important matter to make known. I have discovered that by loading a musket with two balls, connected by a chain ten inches in length, a birchen cance can be cut to pieces in a moment."

Exultant shout arose from the avengers of the Adirondacks, and they commenced acting upon their plans at once. Paskaret exerted himself to procure muskets of the largest calibre, and of the most approved He sold his favorite horse and many things most highly esteemed, to provide the necessary outfit for himself and companions All was at length in readiness. The mus-kets were obtained and loaded with two balls each, and in a manner highly satisfac-tory to Paskaret. Before the echoes of his voice is command had ceased, five canoes, containing in all fifty Irrquois, swept into sicht by turning an abrupt bend in the

"Imitate me," said Paskaret, in a low voice, "and don't fire until I give the word;" and the wily chief commenced singing his death some, as though he had resigned himself to inevitable death. His warriors immediately followed his example, suffering the froque to approach without making a simple of the froque of the froqu single effort to escape. They continued to how! their death-song, and allowed their exemise to approach until within a few

"Now we will satisfy the spirits of our slain warriors!" cried Paskaret.

lastan'ly the avengers seised their mus-last and fired. The balls and their iron laks went crashing and tearing through the fall cances, and cutting the devoted Iroquois in pieces. A sudden and terrible pasie selved the latter. With loud and startling shrisks they leaped into the water from their sinking vessels, while the deadly fire of the Algonquins continued to rake from end to end, severing limbs, and inflicting unheard of wounds.

In a few moments the canoes were all sunken or abandoned, and their passengers were all either killed or drowned.

In may be imagined, with some reason, that the daring feat of Paskaret in destroying fifty of his enemies at a blow, would have satisfied his appetite for revenge, but this was far from being the cuse. On two successive nights he crept into their camp and secretly killed a number of his lated foes. The Ircquois profited by their sad experience; and upon the third night set a watch about their village, in every cabin.

It might be supposed that under such circumstances, Paskaret would not attempt to enter the village sgain; but this was not the case. Lashing the scalps, which he had taken, carefully upon his tack, in a bundle, in order not to lose the valued as d ensanguined witnesses to his daring deeds for the third and last time he cautiously approached the Iroquois village.

But he found his enemies upon the alert,

the Iroquois village.

But he found his enemies upon the alert, and remained quiet, waiting for them to relax their vigilance. In this expectation, he one of the watchers grew jweary of his virils. He dosed and nodded, started up, rubbed his eyes, and strove to be wakeful; but, alas! the drowsy god overpowered him, and he stept at his root.

and he slept at his post.
"He 'ichly deserves to die," said Paskaret to himseif, "for the desire to do his duty is not strong enough to keep him awake. The chieftain stood silently beside the faithless watcher, smiled grimly, lifted his terrible battle axe, and with a blow laid the sle-per quivering and gasping at his feet.

But there were those who had heard, and they now pursued him. But he easily kept beyond them. The pursuit was continued with unabeted vigor until night, when the Iroquois encamped to cook and rest. Paska ret saw them kindle a fire, and watched the smoke curling through the trees. They roasted meat, a.e., and then lay down in their blankets, without a thought of danger.

In half an hour they were all in a sound A dark form might have been seen stealing towards them, stepping in among the slumberers, and by the light of their fire looks to count them.

The sleepers were ten in number. With his hatchet he dispatched nine, with as many blows, and then with the handle awakens the tenth from his sleep. He started to his feet, and was about to give the war cry of the Iroquois, but the sounds died away upon his lips, for he saw his companions lying stark and stiff in death, and Paskaret confronting him with a grim smile.

"A great warrior should not sleep when an enemy is near," said Paskaret.

The astonished Ir quois made no reply.
His tongue seemed glued to the roof of his mouth. "Your companions are sleeping." added

Paskaret; "they will wake no more."
"You are a great warrior," said the Iro-

"I have seventeen scalps," replied Paska it: "one more would make eighteen." "The Iroquois is ready," answered the risoner. "He was at the battle of Trois prisoner. "He was at the battle of life.
Riviere, and he slew many of your best warriors. The Iroquois can afford to die.

But Paskaret did not strike. "The Iroquois is a brave man," he re-plied; "but life is sweet, and on one condi-tion he shall live, and I will leave his vil-lage to slumber in page "

lage to slumber in peace."
"Speak, brave chieftain," said the prisoner.

"I saw a handsome squaw." continued the Algonquin, "in your village; bring her to me to be my wife, and I will molest your village no more; but I will not include all the villages of the Iroquois If you succeed in bringing the beautiful Iroquois maiden to me, you shall be free; but if you do not you shall return and deliver yourself into my hands as my prisoner Do you promise, as a warrior, to comply with these conditions. conditions?"

conditions?"
"I promise," said the Ircquois.

Paskaret then described the fair squaw whom he had seen, so that she was easily recognised by the prisoner.
"Now you may go," said the Algorquin; "but if you attempt to deceive me, I will not rest until your scalp hangs at my belt."

The Indian faithfully redeemed his word.

The Indian faithfully redeemed his word.

The Indian faithfully redeemed his word.

The next right he returned to the spot with the bandsome Iroquois, whose heart being free, had easily been persuaded to become the wife of so great a warrior. She was received with much kindness by her strange lover, and instead of regretting the step she had taken, seemed proud of the distinguish ad honor conferred upon her. ed honor conferred upon her.

They then sat down, ate, and smoked to-gether, and then parted, the Iroquois to re-turn to the village, and Paskaret and his bride to perform a long journey to the coun-try of the Algonquins.

He reached his warriors in safety. His return was regarded as little short of a mira-cle, while his hir wife was not a little envied by the Algonquin maidens on account of her extraordinary beauty, and the good fortune which had made her the partner of the brave Paskaret.

Taking Care of a Friend.

BY A. M. HOPE.

AUL FLEXIBLE was gentle, generous, amighle, industrious; possessed, in Paul Flexible was gentle, generous, amiable, industrious; possessed, in short, of almost every virtue under heaven, but sadly deficient in energy, self-reliance, and moral courage. He required a strong will to lean upon, a daring spirit to counterbalance the weakness of his own. As in love, so in friendship, men seek their opposites, which goes to account for the fact, that the mild and cautious Mr. Paul Flexible selected for his friend the headlong and dogmastic Horace Fartile riexible selected for his friend the headlong and dogmatic Horace Fertile

They were clerks together in the same store; they went into business on their own account at the same time, though not in partnership Horace lent Paul his advice, and Paul endorsed Horace's paper. Flexible Paul and Paul endorsed Horace's paper. and Paul endorsed Horace's paper. Flexi-ble prospered in business better than Fer-tile, for his native caution was a safer guide than the other's rashness.

But Flexible always spoke of Fertile as his 'bust friend.' And it was his best friend's advice which led him to marry Miss friend's advice which led him to marry Miss Melinda Agate, an elderly young lady, with long straw-colored curls, a sharp nose, and independent property as well as will of her own. Fertile rather regretted his counsel, when the honeymoon being over. Mrs. Paul F. put an end to her husband's smoking, the only "small vice" he had, and in terdicted the use of tobacco to all his friends and acquaintances. He attempted diving there once or twice after the "happy event," but cold muiton and colder looks threw him back on his backelor dinners at Parker's. back on his bachelor dinners at Parker's. Still the friendship continued, and in any dilemma Paul always had recourse to his old crony, rather than make a confidant of

One night, not a great while after the happy event which made Flexible the most miserable dog in existence, he was awaken ed about twelve by the crash of military music in the street before his house—nay, under his very windows. "Oft in the stilly night" was rlaved in a very "oisy manner by a full band. Then by a full band. Then come a song and chorus with many references to "happy pair," "hearts and destinies united," &c.

"They can't mean us!" thought Paul, with a sigh. There was a pause—and then the musicians, taking breath, poured forth another strain. There was no mistake about it now—the Apollo band were screnading Mr. and Mrs. Flexible. F.exible was preparing to spring out of bed.

"What are you going to do now?" asked

Mrs. Flexible. "Ask 'em in and give 'em something to eat and drink," replied Flexible "G.ve 'em something to eat and drink, ejaculated Mrs. F, spappishly. "They'd eat and guzzle you out of house and home, if you'd let 'em. If you've got any spunk, you'll call the police and throw a pitcher of water on 'em!

"Mrs. F" replied the gentleman, with some faint show of resolution, "I think I know what the rites of hospitality and the wages of society demand. I shall prepare some refreshments for them."

Go to sleep, and don't make a fool of urself," retorted his better half. 'Or ask 'em in it you please—they'll get nothing in this house—for everything's locked up, and the keys are where you wont get 'em in a hurry."

With a smothered groan, poor Paul buried his head in the bed clothes, that he might shut out the dulcet sounds of the wretched musicians. They played and played—louder and louder—till their energies were nearly exhausted, and then the instruments seemed dyingly to supplicate admission and reward. inexorable

The next day Paul narrated the whole occurrence to Fartile, and begged that he would apologise to the leader of the band "Don t be alraid, my boy," said Fertile.
"I'll get you off...I'll save your reputation... let me alone for taking care of my friends."

"But what can you say to Mr. Tooter?"
"That's my look out. Make yourself per-Yours till further notice. By, fectly easy. Yours till fur by, Paul—love to Mrs. F."

In the course of a day or two, Fertile en countered Mr. Tooter, the leader of the

"Tooter, my dear friend," said he, "you know you serenaded Flexible the other night?" "Yes," said the musician, looking very

"And you must have thought it rather queer that he didn't ask you to 'wood up,' dto."

"Why," said Mr. Tooter, 'I must conand some of our fellows were outrageous "Certainly, certainly," said Fertile,

"quite natural they should be. Now the fact is—step this way—I tell your in confidence—confidence, mind you—that Fiszible was drunk that night."

"Mr. Flexible?" extinized the leader, "I never expected him of—"
"Hush! O Lord! yee—so drunk he didn't know himself from a seventeen dellar bill—brought home by the watchman—new married wife in hysterics—shocking scene—domestic drama—truth stronger than fiction—more things in heaven and earth, Horatio—your philosophy—you understand—heep it to yourself."

Mr. Fartile howed himself away. The

Mr. Fertile bowed himself away. The next day, Paul met him.

"Well, Horace have you seen the leader?"

"O, yes; I made it all right; I took care of you, my boy—he wont think any the worse of you for what coourred."

"My best friend, a thousand thanks?"

"Nonsense, man; don't be sestimental.

Whenever you set into a severa, call on mer.

"Nonsense, man; don't be sestimental. Whenever you get into a scrape, call or me; I ll get you out of it. I'm ready to do as much for you any time."

Mr. Tooter informed the Apollos, 'n confidence, of the reason why Mr Piexible didn't ask them in. They told their wives and sweethearts in confidence; and so it soom got to be the 'own talk. It never reached the ears of Fiexible however; he never knew why Deacon Dickleberry cut him—why Mr. Bluences, who was president of a temperance society, refused to trade with him any more; and never knew, poor man! that one of the most benevolent brokers upon B'a'e street said of him:

'F.exible is a good natured, well meaning man—it's a pity he drinks!"

MOSLEM EUPERSTITIONS -They abhor bells, which they say craw together evil spirits—the very opposite of the old European notion, which was that the sound of hells drove evil spirits away. For bells the Mcslems have men called Muessins, who are stationed in the little balconies round the tops of the tall minarets, and who call out five times a day to the people to come to prayer. There cry is, 'There is no God but God, and Mohammed is the Apostle of God." Moslems must pray five times a day, wherever they are. At home, in the shops, in the street, or on a journey, when the proper hour comes, they fall down on their knees, and go through their prayers and prostrations.

Belief in the evil eye is very prevalent in Western Asia, as it is in Northern Africa and even in Italy and Spain. They "think certain people have the power of killing others by a glance of the eye. Others inflict injury by the eye. Others pick grapes by mere'y looking at them. This power may reat in one eye, and a man who thought he had it veiled one eye, out of compassio for others. The Moslem Sheiks and other profess to cure the evil eye and prevent its effects by writing mystic talismanic words on papers, which were to be worn. Others write the words on an egg, and then strike the forehead of the evil eyed with the egg." When a new house is built, the workmen hang up an egg shell or a piece of alum, or an old root, or a donkey's skell, in the front door, to keep off the evil eye. The Moslem women leave their children ragged and dirty to keep people from admiring them, and thus smiting them with the evil eye. We are sorry to add that they think blue We are sorry to add that they think blue eyes especially dangerous. They believe the name of God, or Allah, a charm against evil, and repeat it as such; but they have some terrible imprecations against those who are thought to smite with the evil eye. Near Tripoli there is what is called the convent of the sacred fish. It is a large high building, with a snow-white dome, and a great sycamore tree stands by the side of a crys all pool of water. Here may be seen a crys at pool of water. Here may be seen a crowd of Mcalem boys, who have come from crowd of Mcelem boys, who have and to play Tripoli to feed the sacred flau, and to play The old Sheik who sceps the place has much faith in the fish. He says they are all M slems, and are in-habited by the souls of Moslem saints. One black fish, the shelk of the saints, does not often show himself. but other fish may be semble dace or chub. The custodian says that during the Orimean War many of the older sek went off under the sea to Bebastopol and fought the Russians and that some of them came back wounded. The people think that anyone who cats the fish will die immediately; but the American Consul in 1856 had some caught and cocked. The proved coarse and unralatable, but not injurious.

WRIAN FUNERALS - A curious custom at Welsh tunerals is termed the "parson's penny." After reading the burial service in the church, the clergyman stands behind a table while a pealm is being sung. In the meantime esch of the mourt ers place some money on the table for his ac eptance. This ceremony is regarded as a token of respect to the deceased, although it was orig-inally intended to compensate the c'ergyman intally intended to compensate the c'ergyman for praying for the soul of the decrased. In some Weish parishes, also, a similar custom called "spade money," is kept up. After the corpse has been, committed to fix resting-place, the grave-digger presents his spade as a receptacle for domaions, these offerings, which often amorate to a goodly sum being responded. sum, being regarded as his perquisite Men marry to make an end; women to make a beginning.

Our Toung Tolks.

CASEM'S SHORE.

BY P. HENRY DOYLE.

If the city of Bagdad there lived a trades man in good circumstances named Casem. Although well to do, his mean ness was the talk of the city, while his person, always clad in the oldest, dirtiest, and most illy fitting garments, made him a common object of curiosity.

While all his garments were notice ble for their signs of avarice and care, his shoes in narticular were an index to his character.

For their signs of avarice and care, his shoes in particular were an index to his character. These, once elegant and valuable, had been mended and patched a thousand times. The soles, from the thickness and number of the nails used, almost resembled a plate of iron, while the uppers were composed of as many pieces as the Argo in her memorable cruise. Ten years they had lived in the world of pieces as the Argo in her memorable cruise Ten years they had lived in the world of leather, and during that time the most ar tistic cobblers of the city had at various times expended their resources and invention in holding them together.

This continual adding of parts, of making fresh additions as it were, to maintain their ruined structure, at length rendered them so ponderous that they passed into the public tongue, and when one would refer to some excessive weight, he spoke of them as being 'as heavy as Casem's shoes' being 'as heavy as Casem's shoes

One day in passing through the market, a customer offered him an excellent bargain in some glass bottles. Knowing the value of this material just then, he closed the contract at ouce. The sale at the same time of a bankrupt perfumer's stock was a strong consideration to influence the purchase Among this was a large quantity of rese water in bulk, and Casem judged, in buying this and bottling it for the market, he would make more than a happy stroke.

On the strength of this he debated whether as was the custom of the merchants on such occasions, he should give a feast or go to the public baths—for both were rare occuroes in Casem's life.

Probably because it cost less, he at length decided in favor of the latter.

Whilst disrobing, a friend, or at least an intimate acquaintance—for the avaricious have few friends—remarked to him that his shoes were making him the city scandal, and that after such good fortune he certainly ought to buy himself new ones.

"I have been thinking of it some time past," was Casem's repy; "but when I come to look at the matter fairly, I think they will last a little yet."

So saying he completed his preparations and entered.

At these public baths, which were maintained out of the city purse, it was the custom for all, high and low, to come without distinction. So, as the tradesman was sur prising himself plashing in the unsecus-tomed liquid, the Cadi of the city came in.

Casem, who did not know his judgeship, left first, but was astonished when he returned to the dressing room to find his shoes missing. And imagine his wonder, on searching farther, to find a splendid pair of brand new shoes in their place.

R covering from his stupor, however, he concluded that they were a gift from the friend who had just advised him to dispense with the old. Consequently it was with extreme joy that he put his feet into the gift, his pleasure, you may be sure, no wise less ened by the conviction they had cost bim

When the Cadi had finished his ablutions is servants sought in vain for his shoes. High or low they were not to be found. In a dark corner, however, they brought to light a couple of metal bound monstrosities ast everyone recognised as Casem's

Without delay a number of attendan's proceeded to his house and arrested him. naturally supposing he was the thief. His arraignment before the Cadi was a matter of but lew additional moments. First exchanging shoes, the enrage cff rial ordered the unhappy tradesman to jail.

The execution of the laws 'n those days and in that place was, nowise extraordi-nary, so that when Casem received a hint that the length of his imprisonment depended upon how wide he opened his purse, he knew exac'ly what must be done. A large sum of money given, with no good grace, to the Cadi a age-ta, set him free.

Decreesed very much, as might be exdisgust with his old shoes, that had caused all the trouble, threw them in the Tigris, which flowed by the town. It happened, however, that some fishermen a low days after, drawing in their nots, found them beavily laden—with the shoes. The big nai's in the soles had torn the meshes fear fully. The fishers, indignant at the occurrence, and it being out of their power to get other satisfaction for the injury done, determined to smash Casem's store windows with them. This was carried out. The heavy missiles striking his shelf holding the recently purchased bottles filled with rose water, brought it and its contents to the floor, dong much damage. It is easy to now fancy Casem's agony of mind. Tearing his heir and beard out in handfuls, he went stamping about his store like a madman.

'Oh, those shoes—those horribl' shoes!
But I will fix them at last."

So saying, he got a spade and dug a deep hole in his garden to bury them. One of his neighbors who did not like him too well seeing him so engage⁴, went to the chief of police of Bagdad, and told him him Casem had unearthed a wast treasure of money in his garden.

Nothing more was needed to inflame the cupidity of the officer. He brought the micerable tradesman before him, and, say what he would, he could not convince the chief as to the real facts. This gentleman's object was meanly in hand, and Casem must yield it or suffer. Consequently he only obtained his liberty by disbursing a considera-

Rendered almost desperate by this last proceeding, and condemning the shoes from the bottom of his heart, Casem took them to the squeduct some distance from the city and threw them in, feeling sure he had seen the last of them. But fate not yet satisfied, directed them right into the main pipe which supplied the city with water, and stopped w. The workmen immediately sought for the cause, and finding the shoes brought them to the Ca ii, alleging that Casem had thrown them there for revenge

The unfortunate owner of the seemingly indestructible footwear was once more ar rested, and subjected to a heavier fine than before. In justice, however, the Cadi gave back the shree to their owner.

Wrought to the ighest pitch of fury, he now resolved to burn them, and as they were yet wet from the water of the aque duct, placed them on his bedroom window. sill to dry.

Here a favorite dog seeing them, began to nose and pull them about. The end was that they fell out, and striking a child that was passing, severely injured it. Another hue and cry was raised, but the father of the child, for a large amount of money, agreed to say nothing about the accident.

Casem, from such a succession of misfor-tunes, was reduced almost to poverty. And his condition of mind from all causes was most pitiable. Finally, he concluded on an important step.

Taking the shoes one in each hand, he sought an audience of the Cadi, which was granted him.

"I desire your highness," be said on entering, "that you make an edict freeing me from all responsibility in the Juture on ac count of these diabolical shoes. I have ex hausted the four elements trying to get rid them, yet they return to torment me. I desire, therefore, to be freed from punishment on account of their crimes."

The Cadi, laughing, published the edict, which exists in the chronicles of the city to this day, pointing the moral that it is possible to carry economy a little too far.

LOVE AND DECRIT.

BY KATHARINE MORTIMER.

RS. BLANCHE BERWYN stood lean. ing i a gracefully picturesque atti ude against the low rustic fence that led up to the main entrance of Clondesley L.wa, with an eager light in her brown eyes as she looked up in Cleve Cleveland's hand-

"I am so glad you are enjoying your visit to my sister, Mr Cleveland. Cloudesley Lawn is a lovely place in summer, isn't it? And when you see what loads of pretty girls are coming to our garden party next Thursday, you will be more delighted than ever to think you accepted our invitation."

"Yes, a very pretty girl, whom her good natured brother in law, Robert Clondesley, had invited to spend her sumner with his wife at their elegant country-seat, for the express purpose of having her secure a val uable catch—Cleve Cleveland if possible

He was almost perfectly handsome. was tall and well proportioned; his face was fair as a woman's, with a heavy tawny gold moustache drooping over a mouth that, when it smiled, or spoke, had such a way of mak-ing women's hearts thrill within them. And Blanche Berwyn was in no way adverse to this divinity making love to her; and as she leaned against the rustic fence looking at him, the blood was pulsing more warmly and quickly through her veins than

"Bo you think to add other temptations to the potent structions already offered, by presenting a new bevy of pretty girls, Miss Blanchet Didn't you know I believe the fascinations in that line at Clondesley can not be excelled?"

"Well, I am really very glad you are so well suited Still, I am positive you will enjoy the garden party. The Wheaton's are coming—you remember what lovely blondes those twins are, and the Rushtons, and May Barrington, and the Erles—oh, everybody?"

Mr. Cleveland switched away at a clump of white petalled daisies with his cane.
"And Miss Seddon—Miss Seddon is coming. I presume?"

He was watching her under his wide-rimmed Panama, and saw, just what he had expected-a change of expression on her fair

Her lips curied in a half-hidden sweer as she answered him.

'Oh, Clara Seddon, you mean the girl who lives over at the mill. No, Mr. Cleveland, my 'ister's list does not include her." And you knew from the cold restraint in this young beauty's voice and manner ex-actly what she and her people thought of Clara Seddon, and you also knew from Cleve Oleveland's face what he thought of the

Two or three hours later, Cleve Cleveland was walking leisurely down the shady side of the mill stream towards the dilapidated, picturesque old mill beside which the girlived, with her aged grandfather—the fair est. sweetest girl that Cleveland's artist eyes ever looked upon.

To day she was sitting on the broad, smooth door-stone at the critage entrance. He had reached her side before she was aware of his proximity

'Are you surprised that I had the courage to face a mile and a half of sunshiny road this broiling day?"

"I thought you would not come again at all, Mr. Cleveland, after what I requested of

He sprang to his feet in a second. "And do you sapp se for a moment you can invent any foolish excuse to keep me from you? Clera! will you not believe me when I swear I love you and care nothing for the obscurity and poverty you think ought to be a barrier between us! Clara, if you have a beart in your bosom you will tell me you love me and be my loved wite!"

Cara was trembling under the glance of the eyes she dared not meet.

"I thank you for the honor, but it is impossible for me to think I would be doing you the justice you deserve if I acceded to you. Mr Cieveland, I am so worldly wise -I know so well how it is with you-you never saw me until a few weeks ago, and you imagine you care for me because my—my— tace pleases you. If you were kind and chari able you would not come here again, you would leave me to go my own way

And Cieve Clevelan 1 knew, when he went home to Clondesley Lawn, that the one only woman he ever had loved or asked to be his wife had refused him

The next day he went away, nor could all the persuasions or reproaches of Blanche Berwyn induce hin to stay for the garden party.

A month later a letter came to him from Mrs Clondesley, announcing her intention of returning to town, and inviting him to rall on herself and Blanche; giving various little bits of country gossips, among which was the news that old Mr. Seddon was dead, and that Clara—' pretty Clara''—had left the place, and Cleve Cleveland's heart sank still lower as he real sed that she had actually vanished out of his reach.

The rooms at Mrs Hutchinson's were thronged with the best of fasnionable socie ty, and surpa singly elegant in her Parisian costume was Blanche Berwyn, with the spark es in her brown eyes, and the same lovely grace in every languid motion that had made Cleve Cleveland so admire her three years ago when it had been a flirtation

To night he was there, at Mrs. Hutchinson's, watching her as she stood the centre of an admiring group; and then he was sud-denly distracted in his thoughts by the men-tion of a name that thrilled him to his heart's

"Miss Seddon! Not the lovely Grecian faced girl who set all the city wild over her last year! What, will she be here to-night?

The same Miss Seddon. You've heard the romance of her life-how she was rescued from drowning and adopted by an immensely rich maiden lady who has since died, leaving the whole of her property to the young girl?

intense eagerness.

Could it be truef and, while his pulses were yet tingling under the excitement of the news, there was a stir and a fluter among the guests, as were pronounced quite distinctly these two names. "Mrs Walters and Miss Seddon."

And Cleve Cleveland looked to see the same pure, pale beauty, the same sweet, wistful eyes, the lovely girlish lips that had doomed him to such misery.

Ten minutes later he saw her and Blanche Berwyn walk together into the almost deserted music room, and he hurried after them, to be brought to a sudden standstill by the low, clear tones of Miss Section's voice-the sam sweet sweet voice

"You can scarcely suppose this meeting affords me a y pleasure, Miss Berwyn when I remember the last time I saw you. But you wished me to come here a m ment If you please, in what way can I be of ser-

She was haughty as a duchess, and Blanche knew she had met a foeman worthy her steel.

"You can be of no service to me what ever, Miss Seddon. I simply wished to see you, that you might assure me of the re-newal of our compact which, you remem-ber, was, that you would never betray the confidence I placed in you when I wan you and for your own make against the attention of Mr. Constitution of Thanks very mach. Miss Barve Mr. Constitution of Mr. Cons ped between them.

"Miss Seddon! Than! My darth my darling from the very first I stand it all now, why you refere Ciarat tell me vou love me now to loved you all this long, weary waller A glow of happiness brightened by "Mr. Cleveland! I always loved year "Mr. Clevenand and engaged—" do now. If you are not engaged—"

He drew her band through his unast

AL OR

TO

He al

The s

On

Half

A litt

The water
The hit is of display

rou se pr sour In a pring in a rou will so will so will see w

And I bid One

Box be he rack! Imilai me, per ime, and be done in the done in th

turned to Miss Berwyn, with his grant ing sarcastically.

"It is really a very great compliance pay rue in declaring yourself my better wife, but, begging pardon for the treey. I must beg to disclaim it."

He bowed overly, as though they have in the grand chain of the language in the grand chain of the language home, despairing for the first time in his life since she had known him, that have no hope for her, while Cleve and On were happy as their previous discipling endurance and misery deserved. endurance and misery deserved.

THE USES OF TAR —This substance is the aid of the chemat's art, has been the up from its lowly place, and now make forth as the source of some of the most soful products in the arts; but its hereicolor and odor have been transmitted to the most beautiful dyes and the most because flavors. Among other products of tar as of insufferable smell is beautiful, with nitric acid, products almonds. It is greatly used for the purpoof perfuming soap. Bensale itself is a begon of perfuming soap. Bensale itself is a begon great solvent powers; and one of the purpoof great solvent powers; and one of the purpoof perfuming soap. of great solvent powers; and one of the most effective removers of grees and known. Naptha is a product of this tenthe source of light in many factories removed from gas works; when treated with time it is camphine, and illuminates or drawing rooms. Naptha is also used a dissolving the various gums, rosins, dis dissolving the various gums, rocks, directly india rubber, gutta percha, and by indiamentality, a hundred new substance as troduced to the world. Analine, the life of the dyes bearing that name, is considered to the section of hydrogen or significant transports. of the dyes bearing that name, is contact from the action of hydrogen or altered sole. Almost all the colors of the minimum issue from it; but in the absence of all ampliances is made by burning with a cacess of air the least volatile compound gas-tar. Among the light oils of the some which, with the heavy oils are some which, with the heavy oils are the tive in preserving wood from rotting at tar creosote, carbolic acid, which is a major of the color of t valuable uses.

SUGAR —Sugar is of modern use of lumbould says that in China it was known and used in ancient times; but if known Humboldt says that in China it was ke and used in ancient times; but if knows all in western Asia or Europe, till will the last few centuries, it was only as the ers brought it as remembrances of Error climes and distant travel. There is conduction for the idea that it was not tirely unknown to the ancient Greek. that bees did not make, and honey roods—the sugar cane being a reed. their expressions, it is thought that s meant, as a'l sweet articles were inche the term honey in early days. Pilny there is a kind of honey from reeds is like gum, and it is used as a many some allusions in the Bible seem to result augar and honey. In later times, it is that the Crusaders found aweet here. canes growing in the meadows of Tothat they sucked these canes, and we lighted with the operation; that these were cultivated with great care, and, ripe, were pounded in mortars, and the j was strained and dried to a solil, like that, mixed with bread it was more put than honey. In 1420 the Portage brought the cane to Spain, Madeira, Canaries, and thence it was carried to the put that the cane to Spain, Madeira, and thence it was carried to the cane to the ca West Indies and Brazil

Two very pretty women—one hard mind and heart, the other witty and table—were discussing the chara teristic a beautiful hand. They did not agree a referred to a friend who was present referred to, a friend who was present could not decide," said the latter, sak the poor and unfortunate, and the say that the prettient hand is the hand spives." BROPPING A HERB.

BT L L COSEAM.

The land was still; the skies were gray with weeping; Into the soft brown earth the seed she can the soon, she cried, will come the time Oh! soon, she cried, will come the time of reaping. The golden time when clouds and tears are There comes a whisper through the autumn

W- 80 -

.

L

-

R to

may project

CELL STATE STATE STATES SELLED.

yes, thou shalt find it after many days.

Hour after hour she marks the fitful gleamof sunlight stealing through the cloudy Hift; Boar after hour she lingers, idly dreaming, To see the rain fall and the dead leaves drift; Oh! for some small green sign of life, she Have not watched and waited "many at early morning, chilled and sad she hearkons

To stormy winds that through the poplars blow;
Far over hill and plain the heavens darken,
Her field is covered with a shroud of snow;
Ah, Lord! she sighs, are these thy loving

He answers, "Spake I not of many days ?"

The snowdrop blooms, 'he purple violet glis-On banks of moss that take the sparkling showers; maif cheered, half-doubting yet, she strays and listens To finches singing to the shy young flowers; A little longer still his love delays The promised blessing—"after many days."

O happy world, she cries, the sun is shining:
Above the soil I see the springing green:
I could not trust his word without repining.
I could not wait in peace for things unseen:
Forgive me, Lord; my soul is full of praise;
My doubting heart prolonged thy "many days."

FLOWER SUPERSTITIONS.

N the Tyrol, it is said, that by binding rue, broom, maiden hair, agrimony and ground ivory into one bundle, the bearer is enabled to see witches. To prevent mearls from becoming discolored, it is sufficient to keep them shut up with a piece of san root. The folden root points to indeed sorings of water as well as to treasures of gold and eliver. The hazel branch has similar properties, but it is only in property qualified hands that it displays its virtues.

The large reseased served witches as horses when they book their midalight rides; and when they work do penames is their crime, they betted themselves the originale and thyme," Circs, being rejected by a youth whom she loved, sursed with into a braisl shape for remains het love.

As old saying: "Besomary only grows well where the middress is reaster. Enchrives bent when section from a neighbou's garden. He had been an advertice "Gains is sown with cause and carses to incure a crop. Farsley seed is apt to come up only partially, as the devil takes his tithe of it in the footbern attach the negroes consider it united by the transgiant parsley from an old home to a new one.

In Derbyshire, England, they say that if the sun snines through the apple trees on Christmas day if 'naures's good crop. In Greece, as well as in England, walnut trees are beaten that they may bear well.

"Women and walnuts in one thing agree,

'Women and wainuts in one thing agree, that the more they are beaten the better they'll be.''

"Women and wainuts in one thing agree,"
That the more they are beaten the better they'll be."

If you omit to put your foot on the first daisy you see in spring, daistes will grow over you, it some parts of Ireland it is unlucky to bring blossoming hawthorn indoors. A Welsh uperstition says if there are withered leaves he from where a baby is christened the baby will soon fade away. The negroes of Trinidad ay that any one cutting down a silk cotton fee will die within a year. The woll's bane is in Greece credited with many malignant inteness. The fevers so common in the neighborhood of Corinth were attributed to it.

A Chinese legend relates that a pious harmit who in his watchings and prayers had often seen overtaken by aleep, in holy wratharainst the weakness of the fleeh, cut off his eyelids and threw them on the ground; but a god aused a tea-shrub to spring out of them, the eaves of which exhibit the form of an eyelid bordered with hisnes, and possess the gift of indering sleep.

Lowers have in all ages used plants as a news of testing the truth or falsehood of the oven ones. Toe garden scene in Faust is a well known illust allon of the use of the peaks of the bluet for this purpose. In France, he ox-eve daisy or paquerette, is used.

The downy seeds of the dandalion or hawk-weed, which children blow off to find out the over joves, but whether he lives east or west, botth or south; and whether he is coming or lot.

Will be come? I pluck the flower-leaves off, And at each, cry yes, no, yes; I blow the down from the dry hawkweed, Once, twice, hah! it flies amiss!

Box or bay leaves crushed in the hollow of he hand tell the truth of the lover by the racking sound made. Poppy leaves for a imilar reason were called tell-tales:

"By prophetic poppy leaf I found Your changed affection, for it gave no sound, Though in my hand struck hollow as it lay, But quickly withered like your love away."

Courtest of Torous and Heart.—Courtesy, perhaps, little affected by conditions of me. But in all persons and at all periods it say be brought into ill-fame by hypocrisy or all persons and breath which the hair, as Macbeth says, would min deny; a man of words, a dress coat, a shadow of amissing of words, a dress coat, a shadow of amissing a sesame never to be forgotten before the doors of seciety, but out of mind and remaid to no purpose when one is at home. The polite to be honest" is a well-known torstb.

trees hanser resisting his rules in his valished position, which search is room politioner; where we record positioner is really politioner? That which I in country of every to refuse." This kind of civility may be relied the beauty of the tongra, as voltairs called true courtesy the beauty of the beaut. It is a pinchbest generoutty, which, henceur hise, has a cortain social value. It consents unpleasant moral deformities. When they resumed it pallistics selfstance, as parts judiciously put on realistics writeries. It is the polish of our conversations' farrite or This is the kind of courtesy which Dr Johnson, with his accustomed mororeness of disposition, called cant, the noxicus weed which he advised Boswell to eradioate with all diligance, if not from his speech, at least from his understanding.

advised Boswell to eradicate with all diligance, it not from his speech, at least from his understanding.

Even the term "compliments," which originally meant all those minor delicates of behavior that may be ald to complete has virtue of courtery, now means very little if anything. Our ancient coercences and rocky hardness of speech has been smoothed and rounded into such forms as these, which, tumbled to and fro by the waves of conversation, become of less and less moment, and finally disappear. Courtery has been dografied into a mercact of physical respect, a bending of the body and the kness, originally belonging to both sexes, afterward confined to one, and now nearly or en'irely obsolets.

Occurreny may also suffer from exaggeration. By too much courtery we become discourteous, and excess of civility makes us uncivil. A gentleman of infinite complairance was about to take leave of another of libe disposition. The latter insisted on seeing him at the door of his house. The former refused, and after many stractons words locked the door on his host and ran down the statresse; but the bost, opening his window, lightly leapt into the street and was ready to hand his great into his carriage. "You might have broken vour neck," said the entertained. "Frue," replied the entertained. "Frue," replied the entertained. "Frue," replied the entertained. "Frue," replied the entertained. "Frue," replied

Grains of Gold.

The generality of people judge of us by our reputation or fortune.

Did we not flatter ourselves, the flattery

We confess small faults, in order to insunuate that we have no great ones.

Never ridicule what others deem to be acred, however absurd it appears to you.

Had we no faults ourselves, we should take less pleasure in observing those of oth-

Who is strong? He who subdues his passion. Who is rich? He who is satisfied with his lot.

It is easier to appear worthy of the em-ployments we are not possessed of, than of those we are.

He that pursues virtue, only to surpass others, is not far from wishing others less for-ward than himself.

O se of the best springs of generous and worthy actions is having generous and worthy thoughts of ourseives.

Never, from a mistaken economy, buy a thing you do not want, because it is cheap; or, from a silly pride, because it is dear.

We must not think it sufficient that we do any thing merely well; but we ought to make it our study to do everything gracefully also

When you have nothing to say, say nothing; a weak defence strengthens your op-ronent, and silence is less injurious than a bad reply.

We should act with as much energy as those who expect every taing from them selves: and we should pray with as much ear-nestness as those who expect every thing

Though there have been some eminen instances to the contrary, an absent man is generally either a very weak or a very affect ed man; he is, at all events, a disagreeable man in company.

The fidelity of most men is one of the arts of self-love to procure confidence. It is the means to raise us above others, by mak-ing us the depositaries of momentous con-

The hatred of favorites is nothing more than the love of favor. Our indignation at not possessing it ourselves is soothed and mitigated by the contempt we express for those who do.

Remember to make a great difference be tween companions and friends; for a very complainant and agreeable companion may, and often does, prove a very improper and dangerous triend.

There are two modes of establishing our reputation; to be praised by honest men, and to be abused by rogues. It is best, however, to secure the former, because it will be invariably accompanied by the latter.

Pursue steadily, and without fear shame. whatever your reason tells you is right, and what you see is practised by people of more experience than your elf, and of e-tablished characters of good sense and good breeding.

Our thoughts, like the waters of the sea, when exhaled towards beaven will lose all their bi terness and saltoes, and sweeten into an amiable human'ty, until they descend in gentle showers of love and kindness upon our fellow-men.

It is not every man that can afford to wear a shabby coat; and worldly wisdom dic-tates to her disciples the propriety of dress-ing somewhat beyond their means but of living within them; for every one sees how we dress, but none see how we live, except we choose to let them.

The good make a better bargain, and the bad a worse, than is usually supposed; for the rewards of the one, and the punishments of the other, not unfrequently begin on this side of the grave; vice nas more marryrs than virtue; and it often happens that men suffer more to be lost than to be saved.

inty, a seasme never to be forgotten before the doors of seciety, but out of mind and reflect points to be purpose when one is at home. The courtest of all times has been, perhaps, a this sease more than half nurseal. The story is a sease more than half nurseal. The story is a puniard offering his watch to a friend to his, "other children are lost frompily accepted the hidalgo's effer, end held it is a new one. The friend it is a new one. The fri

Lemininilies.

In Germany the ladies take their knitting to the beer garden.

How true it is that women do not disapprove of their rivale; they hate them!

A young ledy resembles a mmunition, coases the powder is needed before the ball. The three daughters of the Secretary of tate are all to be married during the present

A cynic says women are so full of their own secrets, that it is impossible for them to seep others.

A New York town has a growing girl of 17 who now touches seven feet, and is still evolving upward.

A young lady speaking of one of her aver sions, said: "He's almost a perfect brute; he only lacks instinct."

It is very mean to sak a man whose wife ts a shrew if it is hot enough for him, or it its scold enough for him.

A lady her ring that a tunnel cost $2 000 a yard, importuned her husband to boy ner a dress of that material.

Mrs Eliasbeth Thompson, the English pallantaropist, during the fast sixteen years, has given sway about $600.000

'The one thing, 'says Jean Paul, "which a maiden most easily forgets is how she looks—hence mirrors were invented

Orfier, a Peoria youth of 19 years, has been adjudged to may a widow $25 for blighted affections. She is $0, and a grandmother. George Bilot, the recently dead Brelish authoress, was proficient in Hebrew, Greek, Latin, French, German, Italian, and Spanish. Vicious—to persist in kissing a pretty, black-eyed girl, when she resolutely declares she wishes you not to. It looks just as though you wouldn't take her word.

The Tennessee Legislature has chosen a

The Tennessee Legislature has chosen a woman as engrossing elerk. The susceptible bald-headed members swear that she is the most engrossing clerk they ever had.

Love is to domestic life what butter is to bread, it possessas little nourishment in itself, but gives substantials a grand relish, without which they would swallow mighty hard.

Benson removed the body of his mother

Benson removed the body of his wother in-law from the old cemetery the other day, and he says he could find nothing but her jaw, which was in a perfect state of preservation.

Boy (to a lady visito): "Teacher, there's a gal over there a-winkin' at me." Teacher: "Well, then, don't look at her." Boy: "But if I don't look at her she'll wink at somebody olden"

A very pretty girl has been doing a large business in the West by claiming one person after another for her husband, and extorting $10 $20, and $50 from each to keep the matter

Many a home has been happi'y saved and many a fortune retrieved, by a man's full con-fidence 'n his wife. Woman is far more a seer and a prophet than man, if she be given a fair

A Michigan girl took a dose of strychnine, Soon afterwards a pet poodlelicked her face and was killed by the poison on her lips. The woman recovered from the dose; the dog it was that died.

Edwin Booth, the actor, is said to present a portrait of his first wife which is kept entwined with flowers by his present wife, and under it is written, "From Mary on earth to Mary in heaven."

Somebody observed in the presence of a woman hater that it is a curious fact that girls never learn to play marbles. "Nothing curous about it," he interposed; "the sex, wen at that age, are too stuck up to knuckle down."

A young sindent was asked by his sweetheart, who had an uncommonly thick head of hair, what he thought of it, and absently answered he thought it would present a fine field for the study of natural history. They were never married.

"Mimma, I don't 'hirk the people who make dol's are very pious people," said a little girl to her mother one day "Why not, my child?" "Eccause you can never make them kneel. I always have to lay my doll down on her stomach to say her prayers."

A warping to brides was given at a recent Chicago wedding, at which there were six ushers, eight bridesmaids and a best man. The wedding party got safely into the church, but the struggle of the bridesmaids for the odd man on coming out was a sight to behold.

Skye terriers were the pets of the ladies until they found something uniter, and pugs are now in highest favor. It has long been a study for scientists to discover why homely men are so fortunate in getting the pretitest wives, and this may give them a hint to work upon.

A Suthwark maiden asks: 'When young man come twice a week with a carriage, and takes a young lady to the theatre and a supper afterward, and makes her magnificent presents, what does it indicate?" It indicates, ma'am, that he has got more money to fool away than we have.

"O Edward," said a fond young wife, as she leaned upon her husband's manly shoulder and toyed with his aubuvn tresses, "let us be buried in one grave." "Yes, dearest," replied the dealer in stocks, "snall I teil the undertaker to come up and measure us now or wait "ntil to-morrow."

Neither of them was over ten years old One leaned sgainst the fence and the other rubbed his back against a lamp-post, and they eyed each other for a long time. Then one of them said: "My mother has got a new scalakin sacque, and your's haint" "I don't care," replied the other, "she friszes her hair and uses paint, and that's just as tony.

Two little giris played together in the garden of the Tuilieries. After awhile 'hey separated, each to return to her parents. One of the little giris, an adorable blonde baby, resisted the careases of her rapa, one of our most distinguished lawvers. "Don't papa," she whispered imperiously, "I have just told that little girl that you are one of my servants."

A new kind of telegraph has been suggested, namely: to place a line of women at the distance of fifty paces from each o' her, and then commit to the first the news to be transmitted, as a profound secret. It is confidently thought that there would be greater dispatch secured by such a plan than by any telegraph now in operation. We don't postend to say how it would "work" though.

Dems Poles.

Marie R: so has been photographed in 158

An centified cat is the latest New York

President Grevy, of France, has a marry of see see per annum.
The old fashioned kiesing bee has been revived in Connecticut.

Equare umbrelles are the admitted hab-

Scenes are now painted to match the dreeses of the star actrees.

Warmed molasses and mustard make a good plaster for stiff neck.

C'erical looking collars in high standing bands are worn by ladies.

Two hundred paper barrels a day can be made by machines now in use.

Long black kid gloves have roses embroidered on the arm above the wrist.

In Siam the penalty for telling a falce-hood is to have the mouth sewed up.

A man and his wife simultaneously went insens at an Indiana camp-meeting.

There are already fouriesn papers in the United States named the Telephone. The late E A. Sothern, the actor. 's said have earned an annual income of $157,000.

In Japan ma's laborers receive thirty five dollars per annum, and temals hands tended dollars.

General Winfield Scott Hancock has been leeted President—of the National Rifle Asso

A bird with brilliant plumage is worm stead of the corrage bouquet with some rening tollettes.

Sandwiches were named after the Earl of Sandwich, a nobleman who nourished in the reign of George III.

A Michigan woman named Williams, as a sacrifice to the Lord, recently severed her tongue with a rasor.

Hon. Hanribal Hamlin, who boasts that he never wears an overcoat, is confined to the house with rher matiem.

A Canada prophet predicts fifty three year of war after 1891, and announces the millenium to begin in 1885.

Wendell Phillips says that no reform, moral or intellectual, ever same down from the upper classes of society. Cincinnati has a Sunday school class of 55 Chinamen, all of whom are apparently sin-ours converts to Christian'ty. Gen. Drum is said to be the only private soldier who has risen to be a brigadier-general in the United States Army.

The figure declars ion of the Superintendent of the Cannus is that the first population of the United States is $50 151 856

Mules are longer lived and much harder than horses. A wouth Carolina sentleman had one which attained the age of eighty. Some pious people of Paget Sound have cut off a big hollow tree forty feet from the ground, and made a church in the stump.

Payne, the author of the song, "Home, sweet Home," never had a home of his own, and died and was buried in a foreign land.

Down East ice mer are putting away two ears' supply, the supply being abundant, and the blocks from fifteen to twenty inches

They say that two of the daughters of Cetewayo, the Zulu chief, are en route to America, and will be secured for public exhi-

A bill prater stuck circus advertisements on the sides of a Chicago borse while the driver was ont of sight, and has been sued for damages.

The h quest of Arm or the wea'thy pork packer of Chicago, of $100 000 for the support of a mission, has been condumned by the Socialists of that city. It is said to be a singu'ar fact that, with he exception of Forkey, every reigning royal amily in Europe has some of the blood of dary Stuart in its veins.

A Majpe man made a will when he was one hundred years old, and executed a codi-cil afterward. He died last sum or, aged 103, and now an effort is being made to break the

A new rule of the fire department of Claveland Orio, requires that the firemen shall be at lose five feet six inches in height, and weigh not less than two poun's to the inch in

An undertaker in the Irish county of engagement

Humbol't save that in the 13 h century the habit of eating human flesh pervaded all classes of society. This and a few other starting facts should be kept before those persons who are constantly prating about "good old

An ingenious machine has been deviced for separating sound cranberries in a barrel from the unsound. They are noured into it at the rate of six barrels an hour, and the sound ones, having elasticity, bound over a barrier, while those decayed remain.

Three Bradford county boys gathered some nitro-glycerine cans and built a fire around them. Enough of the deadly compound abbred to the sides to make a good scatter. The total of injuries were three beads of hair destroyed, four feet partially skinned, three ears impaired in beauty, and any number of firger-nails taken off.

Among the utiles of a new Viceroy of Ireland is the ceremony at his first drawing-room of kissing each lady debutants on the cheek, but the present Viceroy has been seared by the statement that a heroine of the Land League proposes to bite his nose of when she appears at the reception. Elising gree by favor, but biting noses is not near so pleasant.

IF THE SMOULD MEST THE EYE of any one suffering from Bronehitis, Consumption, Asthma, or any Fulmonary Affection, we would refer them to Dr. Javne's Expectorant, which will in all cases aford speedy raised, and in most, effect a speedy cure.

Dem Publications.

"Madame Bovary," by Gustave Frankert, is a movel of continual action, a scene which might pass without startling the imag nation, and which meeds no invention to describe it, while the movement and the coloring help to make the filusion perfect. In it addame Bovary is found everywhere, and in the central of everything. She is a woman who wishes to rice above her class, has vague and extraordinary aspirations, is diesatic fid with her lot, contaminated by a varue sentimentality; while at last her pride tures against herself, and she disappears from her role of wife and mother, and dies from the foliass which have surrounded her. The work, interesting as it is as a nevel must also be regarded a correlations at the second and she of this city, in a large describe. Yourself, paper cover. Price, 75 cents

"Quiet Howrs" is the title of a second series of cellect d poems published by Enberts Brothers, Bosfon The poems, which number seems two hundred, are all short, and the best possible tasts has been shown in their selection. They include examples from the best and most cultured writer—in the language, past and present. They are variously chosen as having a bearing upon, and are grouped under, the headings of Nature, Morning and Evening, Inwa'd Strife, Life and Duty, Prayer and Aspiration, Trust and Adviation, Heaven and the Saints, with a few mi cellameous. To those whose time for reading poetry is limited, these may be recommended. There is also a list of the sultors selected from, and a convenient index of first line. The printing, binding, etc., is of the nextest character. For sais by Lippincott & Co. Price $1.00

character. For sale by Lippincott & Co. Price $1 CO.

"History of the Conquest of Spain by the Arab-Moors, with a Sketch of the Civilisation they Ach'eved and Imparted to Europe." Such is the title of a work just issued in two inely-printed and bound volumes, by Henry Coppes, of Lenien University. While the author expresses bimself as having tried to produce a work for the general public, it is hardly this in the usual sense. It is rather an attempt to present in a concise form all the circumstances bearing upon the subject without nunconsery verbiage. And in this he has admirably succeeded. For the scholar whose time is limited, and for the reader of the better class who labors under the same disadvantage, no more valuable book is attainable on this theme. It gives the gist of the best authorities in a convenient, compact form, and omits nothing essential to a complete survey of the subject. Indeed the disposition of the writer to be thorough and accurate, goes so far as to use the vernacular spelling of names rather than those forms custom has given them in English. When we say that it hardly possesses popular qualities in the usual sense, we meen that nothing has been sacrificed of necessary order or arrangement of fact merely to increase the reader's interest. While the gubject itself eannot help but be in a measure roomantic, and every proper advantage of necessary order or arrangement of fact merely to increase the reader's interest. While the subject itself cannot help but be in a measure romantic, and every proper advantage of composition has been utilized, it is to the solid reader and acholar; that it appeals atrongest. These will find it an invaluable addition to their library. Published by Little, Brown & Co., Boston; and for saje by Ciaxton & Co., his etter. bis city.

MAGARIFES.

The Nursery well carries out its design of being a magazine for youngest readers. All of the articles (and it contains many) are exactly esleuiated, in length, subject, variety, manner of treatment, llustrations, etc., to engage the attention and improve the minds of children. Nothing better of its class could be desired. Nursery Publishing Company. 36 Bromfield Street, Boston, Mass. Price, $150 a year.

a year.

A magazine which parents can well see in the hands of their younger children, is Our Little Ones, published by the Russell Publishing Company, Boston, Mass. Its contained matter is all by writers experienced in writing for children, and is as good as money can purchase, or talent supply. In 'ype, illustrations, paper, etc., the best has been aimed at and attained. The number for February is now before us. Certainly a rarity in literature of this kind, every article in the book is accompanied by splendid pictures. The price of this beau liful monthly visitor is $1.50 per year.

The United Service, in its adaptation to those interested in matters pertaining to the army and navy, is a magasine that cannot be surpassed in the worls. The February number contains, among other articles, the following: "The Frowress Toward a Written Law of War," the Esturn of the Besolute to the Queer of England," "The Organization and a mpleyment of the German Arti lery," "The Gun's Repulsive Force" "A Question of Quarters," "War-Suips and Navies of the world," "Army Catastrophice," Naval Food and Glothing," "Army Items from Europe," Editorial Motes, etc., etc. It takes notes of the most important and interesting events relating to its specialities, and treat them in a cleer and entertaining manner. Hammersley & Co., Friia, publishers. & Co., Priis., publishers.

The January number of the Marazine of Art maintains that periodical's high standard of excellence. The frontispiece is a copy of Rermann Schneider's picture, "Va dyke Painting the children of Charles I;" illustra-Painting the children of Charles I;" illustrated escays are on "Tressure Houses of Art," "The Decoration of the Home. "The Exposition Tation see at Brussels," "Wood Carving," "The Grotzsque in Art," and several other subjects. O her engravings and articles include the "Finishing Touch," "The E set in the Field," "A smile of Completency," "But die of Eus," "Our Living Artists," "Exhibition of Soctils" Art," "Alma-Tagen a," "Francis Arage, etc. This is certainly one of the most magnificent works of its kind published, and is an or ament to any hous. Quesell Fetter & C., publishers, 739 and 741 Broadway, New York.

Descriptor & C., publishers, 728 and 741

Broadway, New York

The Popular *cience Monthly for February, published by Appletion & Co., New York, contains the folio *lng articles: "The Davelopment of Folitical Institutions," by Herbert Spencer; "Origin of the Piow and Wheel-Carriage, 'by E B Taylor, F E 5, (illustrated) "Paysical Education," by Felix L. Oswald, M. D.; "Horses and Their Fet," by Sr George W. Cox; "Dome: tie Motors," by Chas. M. Lungren; "The Value of Accomplishments," by William A. Eddy: "Davwin on the Movements of Plants," by Eliza A. Youmans, (illustrated) "Atmospheric Electricity," by Professor H. S. Carhart, "Optical Illustons of Motion," by Silvanus P. Thompson, E. A. D. SC. (illustrated) "Evolution of the Chemical E. San.onta," by Lotter F. Ward, "Only a Vine Sitp," by Thomas G. Applet ni, "The Movember Meleors," by Prof. Daniel Ethickon's Theis, Literary Rotices, Popular Mise Illany, etc., etc. The Monthly is equal to anything of the kined published in the world. Fries, Weents per number.

THE WISE DOG.

There was a canine mother once. Whose children numbered four Their little, frisky, pleasant ways Were her world's richest store.

The days passed on, and fairer grew The objects of her pride. She loved them so, she rarely cared To have them leave her side.

But life is strange. Quite near her lived A but-her, strong and stout Who dealt in first-class sausages To all the folks about.

One day her pupples disappeared But where she hardly knew; Tho' oft she tried to seek them out, She never found a cine.

Then at the last, her labor vain-Har beart with sorrow sore The neighbors saw her hanging crape Onto the butcher's door

The World of Humor.

All the year round-The carth. Taken on the spot-The measles.

A good prophet-One hundred per cent Has an off-hand way with it-A circular-

Scarlet fever-Madly in love with a girl with tinted hair.

Firemen, as well as other people, like to talk of their old flames.

Why are lawmakers never arrested for passing worthiess bills ?

Talk about winter sports! Don't you see mos' skaters in summer ?

"None but the brave deserve their hair," is how the aborigines put it.

Buckwhest cakes are considered the best kind of a liver pad at present. A man who wears a ten-cent piece on his shirt-front calls it his dime and pin. "The best imported gloves made here," wasn't a bad sign; that is, morally. We hear of a grocor who calls his scales

'ambush," because they lie in weight.

"The good dye young," said Simpkins, as he enshrouded his inoffensive moustache in a sable cloud.

A young man who is in love is not necessartiva mathmetic'an, but is nearly always a sigh for her.

A fac tious burglar who had broken in to an editor's house, said the only thing he struck was a match.

Insanity is no cause for divorce in Wisconsin. They think a person must be crasy in the first place to marry.

A man never looks so much like a redhanded villain as when he is told by the photographer to "look pleasant."

"Love," says a writer, 'lightens the heart " It has been known to have precisely the same off ct upon the pocket book

An enterprising repor'er, writing up a wreck at sea, stated that no less than fourteen of the unfortunate crew and passengers bit the dust.

The first duty of a sailor is to learn all the ropes. It is just about the same with the ma. who wants to get a drink in temperance Vermont

A man whose name we shan't mention, is at present in the enjoyment of a dog that is said to be so crooked as to be unable to curl up on a mat.

The Shakspearian lec' urer who was egged off the platform in Oshkosh not a great while since, still believes "there's something rotten n-mark.

Jones thinks a man is fortunate who has his will contested after death only. He says his will has been contested ever since he wedded Mrs. J.

A story in three chapters : Chapter I Jones started a drug store Chapter II .-His cash ran out Chapter III -Jones foilowed his cash.

A man loses his health, and leaves America, where he lost it, to go to Europa, where he didn't lose it, to recover it. Isn't the American mind getting mixed?

Wheat has allen fifteen cents a bushel during the past week, but the interest on mortgages has remained the same. It takes a pretty hard season to depress a mortgage on

In reply to the question, "What are the wild waves saying ?" we would suggest that it must be, ' Come and see us next summer, and don't forget that we charge & a day for board."

Notice-The person who stole 'Songs of the Sanctu'y" from pew No. 33 should improve the opportunity of singing them here, as she will not have the opportunity of singing them bereafter.

In a little country church recently a woman brought twins to be christened, "What names?" asked the clergyman. "Cherubim and Seraphim," said the woman, "for they continually do cry,"

Traveling along the sea-coast of Florida, a gentleman, noting the barrenness of the country, asked a native, "What do you live on here?" "Live on?" replied the man; "why, on fish and strangers

Brown gave his wife an elegant umbrella for her birthday present. "Be very careful of it," he said to her. "Oh,be easy,dear; I'll use it only on Sundays and holidays, and then only when the weather is fine."

Senior asks professor a very profound question. Professor-"Sir, a fool can ask a question that ten wise men could not answer." Senior-"Then, I suppose that's the reason why so many of us flunk."

It is perfectly proper to speak of a man's magnificent dome of thought, or his Web-sterian brow, but when you speak of a red-headed gentleman as the man with the gilded dowe, ten chances to one he will not feel flat-

A poor excuse is better than none at a'll When a boy was called to account for going fishing on Sunday, he rep'ied, "I know but then before the sah begin to bite I always whistle out one of Moody and Sankey's

"John, what are your boots made of?" Boy-"Of leather." "Where does the leather come from ?" "From the hide of the ox." come from?" "From the hide of the ex."
"What animal, therefore, supplies you with boots, and gives you the meat you eat?" "My

The intelligent printer got it into type that it was a "damnation" party, and the poor minister who had been afflicted with a donstion party didn't k'ck a bit, or request any of his sturdy congregation to go 'round and kill the editor.

It takes a country schoolmaster for shrewdness. When the weather is cold, and the schoolhouse imperfectly heated, he puts the head of the class nearest the stove, and then all the scholars work like beavers to rank high in their studies.

"I think," said a fond parent, "that little Jimmy is going to be a poet when he grows up. He doesn't eat, and sits all day by the stove and thinks." You had better grease him all over. He is going to have the measles. That's what alls Jimmy.

There are lots of people who will tell you that they put no faith in Mother Shipton's prophecy that the world will come to an end this year, and yet will jump and have a scared look in their eyes when they suddenly hear the noise caused by the dumping of a load of

A philosopher graphically illustrates the difference between a blunder and a mistake When a man puts down a bad umbrella and take- up a good one," said Josh, "he makes a mistake, but when he puts down a good one, and takes up a bad one, he makes a blunder.

It all depends on how you look at these ancestors. One little aristocratic girl was yesterday boasting that her foreinthers came over with the Pilgrims, when another wee maide", whose widowed mother had recently married, said: ""haw, go 'long with your old duds : I've got a brand new father."

A store was broken into one night, but, strange to say, nothing was carried off. The proprietor was making his boast of it, at the same time expressing his surprise at lesing nothing. "Nothing at all surprising," said his neighbor; "the robbers lighted a lamp, didn't they?" "Yes," was the reply. "Well," continued the neighbor, "they found your goods marked up so high they couldn't afford to take them."

A two-foot rule was given to a laborer in a ship-yard to measure an iron plate. The laorer not being well up to the use of the rule, after spending considerable time, returned. "Noo, Mister Mick," asked the plater, "what size is the plate?" "Well," replied Mick, with a grin of satisfaction, "it's the length of your rule, and two thumbs over, with this piece of brick and the breadth o' my hand from here to there, bar a finger."

A farmer, finding a dezen of his men idly stretched out on the ground offered a dollar to the one was was the lastest of the lot. Eleven jumped up, claiming the reward. each asserting himself to be the laziest piece of humanity in the universe. The money, however, was awarded to the twelfth, who had slothfully kept his position, and when it was tendered to him, murmured out, "Can't you put it in my pocket?

Nothing purifies and enriches the blood and destroys all poisons in the system like Hop Bitters.

It was told, as a good-natured joke, of an old doctor, that being on a visit to a village where the had spent the earlier part of his life in practice, he cae morning before breakfast went into a church-yard near the house where he was stopping Breakfast being placed upon the tab's, the doctor was inquired for. "I believe." said the servant, who had seen where he went, "that he has gone to pay visit to some of his old patients."

It would save a great deal of embarrasssent, and perhaps add to their emoluments, if clergymen generally were to charge a fixed rate for marrying couples—say $5 for the first offense, $10 for the second, $20 for the third, and so on. They might even issue tickets as they do in milk factories, with a reduction to persons taking a quantity. In order to en, courage lawful wedlock, the job should be done very cheaply to young couples, but the clergy should take it out of wid owers and old

A down town debeting a estling over the question recent ounded: "Why do not sows at rest the same way as dogs ?"

"How is it that Wilkins and his w so happily together? Why, they he married twenty-two years and he had a row." Oh, that is a very state? She is out waching the whole, he is a night watchman.

Fashion Notes-Coupons are not est le this year. Railroads have long a are trimmed with rich dividends. are trimmed with rich dividends. Common very fashionable, but not common are much worn at Sing Sing and he Figures are much sought after; then to year pretty one. Undressed hid with he for children's bathing suits next ment for children's bathing suits next ment of the series are used for bonnets, and the line wory large. Hight dresses with a seeing are the best. Old gold is still posts makings. Thin, flat pocketbooks are in sections Christman and New Year. since Christmas and New Year.

This space was formerly occupied by the sament of "Rev. Jos. T. Inman." As we are informed no such person exists, and the para-ing to represent him are expessed as front thony Comstock's new book, "France b we have cancelled the order for its insertion

UPERPLUOUS HAIR. Madas permanently removes SuperSuous Hair wing the skin. Send for a circular, his bold, 14 Sawyer Street, Boston, Mass.

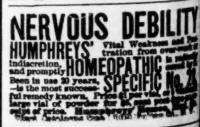

CANVASSEES Make from 255 to 800 pe goods for E. G. RIDBOUT & CO., 10 Res

Weakness and sickness changed to hear strength with Hop Bitters, always. See a

When our readers answer my portisoment found in these a they will comfor a favor on the he lisher and the advertiser by m the Saturday Evening Pest.

adopt the sure remedy, Hos etter's Stement In Diseases of the organs named beget offers in serious, and a delay is therefore hazardes. It is a liver complaint, chills and fever, cary tic twinges kidney weakness, bring series trouble if trified with Lose no time in using fective, sare and long known medicine. If the stomach, liver and bowels are see fective, safe and long known medicine. For all druggists and dealers generally.

FLEXIBLE LAD: ES GENTS Rubber Mittel

As elegant in appearance as black his mires they closely resemble. Just the thing they closely resemble. Just the thing they core to hang out clotnes in winer. Just in clergymen, doctors carriage driver, as the kind in the world.

Rample pair by mail so cents: 3 pers far a large discount to agong.

Large discount to agong.

AMERICAN MANUFAUTH.

CONSUMPTION

I have a positive remedy for the above use thousands of cases of the work kind standing have been cured. Indeed, or fatth in its efficacy, that I will send FhEE, together with a VALUABLE TO this disease, to any sufferer. Give Expen-eddress.

30 Happy Day, Chrome, Lace &c.O. MUSICAL WONDER-to MATE

DR. RADWAY'S SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT

THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.

FOR THE CURE OF CHRONIC DISEASE, SCROPULA OR SYPHILITIC, HEREDI-TARY OR CONTAGIOUS RE IT SEATED IN THE

OR STOMACH, SKIN OR BONNS, FLRED OR NEEVES,

CORRUPTING THE SOLIDS AND VITIATING THE PLUIDS.

LIVER COMPLAINT, Etc.,

Kidney and Bladder Complaints. Urinary and Womb Diseases, Gravel, Dropey, Dia betse, Stoppage of Water, Incontinence of Urine Bright's Disease, Albuminuria, and in all cases where there are brick-dust deposits, or the, water is thick cloudy, mixed with submanass like the white of a cag, or threads like white slik, or there is a merid dark, billous appearance and white bone-dust deposits, and when there is a principal, burning seasables when passing water, and pain in the small of the best and along the loins. Sold by druggists. PRICE ONE DOLLAR.

R. R. R.

DYSENTERY,
DYSENTERY,
OHOLERA MORBUS, FEVER AND AGUE,

BY RADWAY'S READY RELIEF

HEUMATISM NEURALGIA DIPHTHEBIA INFLUENSA BORE THROAT, DIFFICULT BREATHING, BELIEVED IN A FEW MINUTES

BY RADWAY'S READY RELIEF

Bowel Complaints.

ACHES AND PAINS.

PRICE, 50c. PER BOTTLE.

RADWAY'S REGULATING PILLS

VEGETABLE SUBSTITUTE FOR CALOMEL. veriestly tastaless, elegantly coated with sweet gum, urge, regulate, purify, cleanse and strengthen.

RADWAY'S PILLS, for the cure of all Disorders of se Stomach, Liver, Rowels, Kidneys, Bladder, Nerous Diseases, Headache. Constipation, Costiveness, ndigestion Dyspepsia, Billionsness, Fever, Inflamation of the Bowels, Piles, and all derangements of se Internal Viscora. Warranted to effect a perfect urs. Purely vegetable, containing no mercury, linerals, or deleterious drugs.

AF Observe the following symptoms resulting from pleasess of the Digestive Organs: Constipation, Invard Piles, Fullness of the Blood in the Head, Acidity of the Blomach, Nausea, Heartburn, Disgust of Food, ullness or Weight in the Stomach, Bour Eructations, inking or Fluttering at the Heart. Chokins or Suffering Beasstions when in a lying posture, Dimness of Ision Dots or Webs before the sight, Fever and Dull ain in the Head, Deficiency of Persylration, Yellowess of the Skin and Eyes, Pain in the Side, Chest. Simbs, and Sudden Flushes of Heat, Burning in the Iside. VEGETABLE SUBSTITUTE FOR CALOMEL.

A few doses of RADWAY 8 PILLS will free the sys-

Price, 25 Cents per Box. We repeat that the reader must consult our books and papers on the subject of diseases and their cure, among which may be named: "False and True," "Eadway on Irritable Urethra," "Eadway on Serof-ia," and others relating to different classes of Diseases.

SOLD BY DEUGGISTS. Read "False and True." Send a setter stamp to RADWAY & CO., No. 33 WARREN, corner CHURCH St., New York. All Information worth thousands will be sent to you.

TO THE PUBLIC.

There can be no better guarantee of the value of Dr. RADWAY'S old established R. B. B. REMEDIES than the base and worthless imitations of them, as there are False Reservents, Reliefs and Fills. He sure and see that the name "Endway" is on what you buy.

HOLIDAY GIFT FREE!

DUR NEW KNITTING MACHINE or Toy Knitter, is having an immense sale. This new KNITTING MACHINZ is designed as a pleasing and useful article for Lades and Children. Over 1000 different pricies of beautiful designs can be made with this Machine, for which there is always a ready market. The Knitters being made of a variety of colored wood and $2,500 WistWest. is hendsome in appearance, and guaranteed to give perfect $47184. We make a $PECIAL OFFER to the readers of this paper, to send one of our New Knitting Machines. In perfect order, by mail, for its cts, or two for a cts. All persons sending 25 cts. for two Knitters will receive a 50-peg lituarized book, full directions, and Five of our $4,000 Les FREE.

AP This order is good now. Order soon.

50 All Liberrated Chrone Carle, as I alle. Mr. for terms, etc.

Nature's Own Remedy! The Friend of Man!

The Destroyer of Disease! No Drugging! No Quackery!

Make no mistake ! BUY THE BEST, AND OBLY ES BEST. PROF. CALDWELL, Inventor and Patentee of the Wonderful Galvanic Battery, has completed his improved Electro-Magnetic curative agent to the public. It has fully six times the power of any battery ever inven 'ed and at the same time will not injure the most

ELECTRICITY!

The Agent of the Almighty I Hundreds of little nerves and muscles respond to the action of the wonderful Electro-Magnetic Battery the moment it is applied. It instantly allays pain, strongthens the weak and painful parts, and draws all poison from the blood.

This Battery is positively the saiest, quickest and best remedy for the cure of Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Dyspepsia, Constipation, Sciatica, Lumbago, Aches and Pains, General Debility, Head Troubles, Skin Diseases, Female Complaints, Nervousness, Trembling, Indigestion, Diseases of the Chest, Catarrh, Deafness, Spermatorhos, Epilepsy, Paralysis, Impotency, Sexual Exhaustion, Spinal Dis ases, Nervous Complaints, Urinary Diseases, General Ill-Health, Wasting Decay, etc.

The Battery is worn next to the skin, on the breast or between the shoulders. In ordinary cases, one Battery is sufficient, but in severe cases of Eleumatism, we would recommend two Thousands testify to the wonderful curstive power of Electricity when applied in this manner. If you are alling from any cause whatever, buy one of our Improved Electro-Magnetic Batteries, and wear it according to direction for thirty days, and if it does not benefit you, return it uninjured and we will refund your money. THE PRICE OF THE BATTERY IS ONLY $1

It is sent by mail securely sealed. Address ali orders to,

Payson Caldwell Battery Co.,

521 Chestnut ! treet.

Philadelphia Pa Ar Intelligent agents wanted in every town and county in the United States. Send stamp

HAVE YOU SHAKESPEARE?

C. G. STODDART,

1420 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

John Wanamaker.

for

DRY GOODS

If you cannot wisit the city, send to us by postal card for Housekeeper's Price List and Under-

JANUARY wear Price List. We fill orders by letter from every State and Territory at same prices charged customers who visit the store, and allow same privilege of return.

The stock includes Dress Goods, Silks, Laces, Fancy Goods, and general outfits.

This is the particular season in which to get and prepare Housekeeping Dry Goods-Sheetings, Pillow Materials, Linens, Napkins, Towels, etc. It is also the season for Ladies' Underwear. The Grand Depot contains the greatest variety of goods in one establishment in the United States, and exchanges or refunds money for things that do not suit, upon examination at home.

and

FEBRUARY

Grand Depot,

Philadelphia.

Purent and Best Medicine ever Made, mation of Hops, Buchu, Man-and Dandelion, with all the best and rative properties of all other Bitters, he greatest Blood Purifier, Liver a tor, and Life and Health Memoring an possibly long exist where Rop ed,so varied and perfect are their de and vigor to the aged and infirm. They give new li icating.

No matter what your fe ment to use Hop Bit-re sick but if you use them at once-saved hundreds. to may save your life. It has $500 will be paid for a ca sure or help. Do not suffer suffer, but use and urge them use Hop 8

+>THE+ HALING PILLOWI

A QUICK REMEDY POR CATARRE!

The best proof that it is recommend in this : If in a week yes are not accident, return it and any agent who still it will pay yes yet meany bank. This is a cross country bank.

The most extensive and comprehensive to the first line of the triple of trip Writers in America and Engined.

Li also contains a number of

Most Valuable Tables and other Articles, gring is formation about WEEGHTS AND HEAGURES in common use: the HETRIC SYNTHE! ABBREVIATHOM used in WHITING! FOREIGN WORDS, PHRASES and FROVERIM, do, making it indisponable to every READER,
WRITER and TRINERE. Polity filmstruted. Price, 10 Cip. By mail stat. extra.

Its clearwhere, send for estalogue of standard.

ME ONEAPEST BOOK STORE In the WORLD. Lidens, ARESCAN BOOK STORE, Sti Breedway, J. Y.

CARDS, 10 Lily & Imported Glass, 10 New Transporent, 20 Motto, Beroil, Engraved in Colors, one Love letter Name on all 18c. WEST & CO., Westville, Ct. BIGPAY to sell our Rubber Printing Bros & Co., Cleveland, O.

PRINTING PRESSES, TYPES and Ma-terial. Send two Sc. stamps for estalogue. B. O. Woods, & Federal St. Boston, Mass

50 Sold, Figured, and Astron Chromon, Me. Agu.

200000000000000 WONDERFUL रेक् कर्क कर कर कर कर कर कर कर

TAPE WORM

INFALLIBLY CURED with two spoons of medicin in I or 8 hours. For particulars address, with stamp, i H. EIUKHORN, No. 4. St. Mark's Place, New York

Do Your Own Printing I 58 Press for cards &c. Self-in 54. Larger sizes for business or piessure boys. Type setting a by printed instruction to money saver and money mai-Send 2 stamps for Catalogue Presses, Type, etc., to mant's

TONECTAR A medicinal Tonic or need to support the companion of the compani

MPLOYMENT — LOCAL OR Traveling Alac SALARY per month. All EXPENSES advanced. WALKS promptly path. SLOAN & Cla. Soc Google Nt. Claretamath. &

SIOS CICAR ELEMEN

FREE S Amples and Conseque of best set-ing articles on earth. World. Mrg Co. 122 Hamas W. V. L.

ORGANS 20 to $1000 9 to 25 Stope Planes $125 sp. Pagerfree A4-

50 All gold, stiver, shell, motto and floral Chrome Cards, in beautiful colors, with name, lee, Agt's sample book 25c Star Printing Co , Northford, Conn.

75 Cards, Chromo, Motto, Roses. &c., all new style. name on 10c. Ag'ts samples 10c. G. A. Spring.

25 Lovely Mors Rose and Assorted Chrows Cardinate on ite, A 22-Column Story Paper Free with each pack, American Card Co., West Haven, Ct.

50 Gilt Edge French Chromos and assorted cards, beautiful designs, with name in gold, 16c. Agents outils, 16c. Carton Printing Co., Northford, Cb.

50 Fancy Cards 10c. glit&bevel edge cards a specialty 50 All Chrome Cards. New & Elegant Designs, with name ite. Branford Print's Co., Branford, Ct.

6 LOVE Letters M literared Record Orders Popular senge asserted, all Me. West & Co. Westville, Or

20 good and many Prome Date, The many Miles

Jentier' Department.

PASSIDE NOTES.

is the attempt to introduce full sterves, an attempt which is wisely begun in the winter, as even the Paristense herself is loth to adopt so severe a change from the giove-like sleaves so long worn. And there se seems for the prejudice-if so severe a name must be given to a matter of and full sleeves are certainly not pretty when they are composed of thick fabrics suitable for winter wear, although nothing can be more charming than the full sleeve of Madras or Indian musifu, of tulie, or of mouline de soie. Pretty arms are improved, and as of plain arms are mercifully sealed from our gase by this delicate veil. Some months must elapse before the compiete adoption of this wode, and this will bring us to the sweet summer days; and we may probably, it the weather be but propi se, see the return of muslin gowns and gigot sleeves modernized, etherealized, and th girls to '61 looking as 'sweet and shy" as they did in 'di. Low dresses are even now made with short "pent-house" sleeves, covering the shoulder and upper part of the erm, an innovation that will give great satisfaction to young ladies with thin arms.

Tightly-gloved hands, stiff and paralysed as it were, in their kid casings, are no longer ered elegant. The rean de Suede giove reigns and triumphs, to the excusion of toat of dressed kid. For mornings and afternoons med kids of the natural or medium color are worn for dinners and solrees; they are of light delicate tints, while for balls they are white. In all circumstances they must be very long, very loose, and without buttons-three conditions essential at present for ele

In speaking of change in dress and glove de me of another change, in which the eracies of Fashion predict the revival of the Empress Josephine style of short waists and long trains.

The hair also is to undergo a change. The trings on the forehead is to be re'ained, and ignon at the nape of the neck; but insteed of the front being quite plain, it is to call th curis at the side.

All the new soft and pale shades are pre great for ball or evening toile'tes. Sort stuffs and pale colors—such is the order of the day for these toliettes, which are made of white pale bine, or soft pink surah. The skirt is of sun composed of several draperies-in general, six-three on each side, which cross slightly in the middle of the front, and are set at the other extremity in the elaborate drapings of the long back breedth. The draperies of the front are arranged in three or sour horizontal pleats, the lower edge being trimmed with very wide moss fringe. That of the lower drapery falls on a flounce with large box pleats, surrounded by two or the puffs ; for the bottom of skirts is always much rimmed, both above and below.

A charming ball tollette of white satin has a low rounded corsage and tunic richly emed with white beads, forming a long point at the left side, under which are added pleatings of satia bordered with white beaded lace; the long undulating train is orna" mied with a spray of white roses.

A short tollette of white satin, high to the meck, has the edge of the basques covered with a deep-picated flounce beaded with three eatings.

A tollette of blue satin trimmed with white lace open en cour, the lace carried round the ning, and terminating at the point under large bow of blue satin. The tunic of satin is pointed and draped in regular folds to the waist in front, the sides being left plain, and only slightly draped towards the edge; the long train is formed into large pleats, and the Evening dresses of light brocade are trim med with China crape scaris, forming the overskirt, or with embroidery on tulie, the latter playing the part of canvas in tapestrythat is, being invisible under the embroi-dery, by which it is entirely hidden. The emery is worked with chenille, mixed with old, stiver, silk, and beeds, and is one of the nest beautiful trimmings imaginable.

The success of black satin increases from day to day, and is worn even at balls by young people. In this case the dress is brightened by black lace, woven with gold id to seen always and everywhere), jet or mille, and it is entwined still fur-white to dark purple.

生物验

So much has eatin, in its various grades of matin de Lyon, entin mervetileux, or plain sails, asurped the popularity of silk, that an black silk dresses are now laid to one de. When black dresses are worn, they are shamers, satin, brocade, velvelsen, or velik slik is not even used for triming; it can only be employed as the under a of dreson, on which to arrange he black eachmere draperies, and this is done cinelpally to find a use for old black slik ipally to find a use for old black slik in, no longer granted admission into mable sectory; and now that black slik it of mation, I may state that few is are more unbecoming than black slik in. They were convenient, and always

ing. Black espimers to infinitely more be ing. Black commerce to indition; more be-coming, and can be rendered as degrant as required by any society by trimming it with satin and jet. A black commerce dress trim-med with satin or jet, or both, may also have a second bodies or cuirasse made of tatin or jet, which will render it immediately fit

Coats which are very much in vogue just row are made of the richest stuff-Louis XIII. brocades, or else real or imitated Colness or Japanese stuffs. They are also worn for full dress, with skirts of gauss or of talle embroidered and spangled with gold and sil-

Flowers, which are somewhat out of favor flowers, which are somewhat out of favor for winter bonnets, remain one of the most charming ornaments of the evening totlette. The favorites of the season are pinks, chrys-anthem "ms, roses, and Parma violets. They are made into berthas, or rivieres, as they are now called, which edge the neck of dresses, whatever the shape, and are finished on the aboulder by a thick circular.

shoulder by a thick cluster.

A charming tollette for a young girl is of ivory crepan de l'Inde ; the skirt is bordered with five gathered Founces, each one edged with a rouless of violet satin; the scarf drapery has five similar flounces joining those on the skirt. The back of this tunic is of crepon mixed with satin, and bordered with a wreath of violets, and the pleated corrage is adorned with a jabot of violets placed be-tween two fote of lace. The tollette may be most effectively carried out in white satin with drapery of dark green velvet and jabot of violets.

Here is a very pretty dress for evening. A pink skirt, trimmed to the knees with five flources, graduated in width. Under the skirt are two plattings of satin, and under those again a white balayouse. A pink crape scar ate lightly round the hips, and then forms a puff and train at the back. The body is of satin, and is low, or half low, according to taste. It has a berthe fichu, however, which forms a point in front, and is as long as the body itself. The sleeves are short, and show the shoulders, as in olden days. They are made of plattings, which cross over the upper part of the arm, and are closed under neath. The train is of satin, like the skirt. and like the skirt is edged round with crape to match the scarf.

Another equally lovely dress is of ivorycolored satin, entirely covered with ivory lace flounces, headed with ivory is ce ruches. The body is opened to the waist in front, over a chemisette of isos frills and ruches, like those on the skirt. Elbow sleeves of lace Net flounces and ruches may be substituted for the lace, and will look equally light and pretty, if a little less rich.

For balls, dresses of light materials, such as gause, net and crape, whether plain or em-broidered, will be trimmed with long garlands of flowers.

Brocaded satin and silk dresses have only a bouquet on the body, with occasionally one on the showlder. They are too rich in them-selves to require much trimming.

Chemille flowers and foliage are worn in the hair instead of ribbon bows. They are also put on hats and bonnets, and there is a talk of putting them on heavy silk, velvet, or plush dresses. They look very well in the hair-much better than ribbon bows. They are sometimes edged round with colored beads, or have bead centres, and they are fastened to the hair or dress with pretty pins or

Bead embroidery is still all the fashion. It is used on dresses, cloaks of all kinds, and especially on opera cloaks, which are acquiring more attention than they have ever done

Lace jabots, cravats and bows are fastened still by pins, representing mice; frogs, powdered with diamond dust; ruby flies, which are worn in the plural, some:imes as many as eight being pinned in the front of one bow or ichu. Another ornament (†) is the snake. It is made of winsh, with a metal head, and eyes of precious stones; the tongue hangs out of the mouth. It is worn round the neck of the dress, with the head on the neck itself, close to the left ear. Sometimes these snakes are d rou teathers.

Among large hats the Directoire is still first favorite. It is made of black or dark felt, and is trimmed with long feathers to match. An entire cock is sometimes placed on one of these hats. Cooks are in vogue just now. They are painted on dress-buttons, iave and muffs. They are worn as ear-rings, and also as cravat-pins. They are taking the place of lizards, hogs, etc.

Side bags are decidedly substituted for ocke's, and they belong to the lingerie department of dress. They are made of satin, plush, or velvet, either black or to maich the olor of the dress. They are embro'dered with gold, silver, etsel, jet, or colored beads, and have a fringe to match all round, and tax sels on each side, or ribbon bows, according to the strings which masen them to the waist, whether they are of ribbon or silk oord.

Fireside Chat.

THE ART OF PAINTING OF CRIMA.

THE ART OF PAIRTING OF CHIRA.

HE or ject of this paper is to give some information to those readers who have not yet learned the art of china painting, so we shall now ponsider the different styles of working; we shall, however, confine ourselves to over-glase and under-glase painting, leaving out of the question in the present paper of majolica wars, and also the lustre wars, that is magnitud for the amateur ortics.

lustre ware, the large state articles required we will first mention the articles required for under-glass painting. Fine dry colors in giass capenies should be obtained in presercase to those ready prepared in tubes. They can easily be mixed after a little possesse to any required thickness, which is not the case with prepared colous; and they have not the disadvantage of becoming "fat" by keeping, which model colour are at times apt to become, the issaning of watch term shall be given latic on.

All embers are the brighter for being fired as soon as possible after treit mixture with oil. The polors for over-glass patinting are entrely different from those used for winder-glass; in no case can one be made to take the place of the other, the enamel colors being in themselfs glessy when laid on the chins, while the under glass ecolors are dull, and are dep indent on the unequent glasing for their brilliasse. Catas-painting, both over-glass and under-glass, can be worked with either "ster or oil; as it is our intention to give information on the use of both oil and water, we will mention the mediums necessary. A bottle of its oil turpentine will be required. It is just possible that in the case of our artists living in the country fat oil of turpentine could not easily be presured by thou; the following directions for its hand recture are therefore given for their use:

Ordinary turpentine is the only article needed. Pour a small amount into acup, and the fat eil will be left ready for use. More turpentine is added, little by little, as the "pirit passes off. For water-color, gum is generally used.

The bryshes should be of sable for water.

nsed.

The brushes should be of sable for water, of camel's heir for oil-painting; seven or eight will suffice at first for practice. One or two brushes called outliners are required for marking the airong outlines of the design. Two dabblers of different sizes should be procured, one small and the other large, for laying the background smooth and even. A china palette, a palette-knife and a muller for grinding the colors are indispensable for the chinapainter.

The plate places of the most be colored.

ing the background smooth and even. A chins palette, a raiette-knife and a muller for grinding the colors are indispensable for the chinapainter.

The plate, plaque, or tile must be carefully observed to see that it is as fan tiess as possible; any assessment in the painting, and it cracked ever so slightly, the plece will probably be returned from the fiting in two parts, and both time and labor spent on it will fall; its shaps should had be done correct. A clever artist might sketch at one on the plaque or tile, but it is safer to make a drawing, and then either copy or transfer it to the china. Porcelain, being the ware already gland, will not take a pancil-marg, therefore the aksten must be made in ink, or some other vegetable color. To transfer a sketch, take the drawing and any it ow fine tile in the position the safetsh if to coupy, then slip the red or black trainfer paper between it and the enina, fastening down the edress with modeling wax, gummed paper, or a piece of the blank paper, that is often found on esamps ween brught in any quantity; this will keep the design firmly in its place, and can easily be washed off when the drawing is completed. Go over the whole outline with a sharp-pointed pencil or agate point, then lift one corner of the paper to see if all the drawing is on the china. It so, the design is to be taken off the time for paper by means of cha-coal or common rose-pink being pounced through noise picked in the design at certain intervals; but this involves more trouble, and there being no fear of the transfer paper marks howing after the firing, it is best to employ it as the quicker method of the two. The outline should be kept clear and firm, but no great harm is done if the lear are happens to get beyond it into the beckground space, as all marks in Indian ink will fire out; still, an outline badly done testifies that an uneducted each of the outline should be kept clear and firm, but no great harm is done if the lear are happens to get beyond it into the background space, as all

Ing the highest control of the round to rub off

To mix the colors with the right allowance of oil way be found, on first trial, a rather more difficult performance; if, however, the directions given are closely followed it can be accomplished without any great fear of failure. It is very important to rub the colors down until not a trac of grittiness remains, otherwise the tint when fired will appear apeckled; here the mulier and glass slao will be in constant requisition. After placing bein constant requisition. otherwise the tint when fired will appear speckled; here the mulier and glass slap will be in constant requisition. After viacing some color on the priette or slap, dip the palette knife into the fat oil, and grind down the color with it until the oil is thoroughly incorporated, diluting it with turpen ine gradually until it is of such consistency that it will work easily with the brush, then with the mulier rub round and round, when it will become perpectly smooth without a grain of color remaining unmixed; add more turpentine as it dries on the slab Some pattence is required in the mixing of colors, but it has its own reward in the evenness of the tint when laid. The same test as before may be employed to prove that the right quantity of oil has been used; allow the color to dry, then if it is found to be very shiny it proves that too much fat oil has been used, and the consequence would probably be that if the color was used in this condition, when fired it would boil up or blister, sanwing little bubbles on the surface that would have to be carped off and repainted, which would effectually destroy the flatness of a tin besides giving couble work to the artist. The same effect will be produced by the use of most colors which have been kept too long. They were before mentioned as Decoming too "fat;" when such is the case, the only remedy is to re mix them by dry color. The use of too little fat oil is, though not so disastrous in its consequences. to be discouraged, for on drying the color will be found to be rough, and in an unpleasant state for working up with fluishing touches

[Concluded next week.]

The celebrated artist who crowed so natand construct artist who trowed so non-urally that the sun rose three hours before its time, has recently finished a picture of the moon, that's painted with "uch wonderful facility to nature that it can't be seen in the

"Thousands have tried it, and will never use any other," is the significant and par estic smoominm of a cough balsam which circulates in New England.

Lusmers to Impirers.

S. H. B (Seats Fe, F M.) -See seemer to G, R CARRIR, (St. Johns, M. R.) - We consider to conficial.

S BAHES, (Omaha, Neb.)-Ho: although a jee TRESPASS. (Mount Holly, N. J)-State your case to the nearest magistra's.

f), H. (Auduben, lows.)—You may send it on, and

M. H. (Conant. lows)—The address of the house is

J H. (Oneida, Maho)—Tasse is no reward offered for the purpose that we ever heard of.

PLAY (Philadelphia, Pa.)-Titania is one of the Y. W. B. (O'kmulges, Ind. Ter)—We have no re-membrance of the fact but think it was about the year 1888 just outside of Bremerieven, in Warmany. READER, (Madison, Va.)—You would have to write to a drug house to learn about the matter. Bend a postal directed to yourself, and we will forward an address.

B D (Washington, D. C)—An academy of near the tample of Apo'le Lyceus was because that reason the Lyceum. It has since become oric appeliation.

J. K. M (Elkton, Md.)—A very and, but very and story. Do not lose heart; be of good cheer. The fiture seems indeed very dark; but we know not what is in store for us.

tore seem's indeed very dark; but we know not what is in store for us.

F. W. E. (Schnyler, N. Y.) — We are not sweet that Washington over surremeased himself and savey as prisonary of war during the Revention. Semesee has been imposing on you.

Surrections, (West Chester, Ps.) — Two lines plans to each other are necessary parallel, and these plans to each other are the same distance apart at all points. Therefore, the two walls, if plans to make other, are as far distant at the top as at the booten.

C. L., (New York, H. Y.) — Drug in black, or dark blue suit, frock or Prince Alburg out, with input on Wear brown or lavender gleves. Pursuity plain left, round gold ring. It may be as heary and velacity and you please. The ring is placed on the fact the lady's left hand, counting the themth. See first the lady's set hand, counting the third.) the fi-JAMES 8 (Richmond. Ind.)—The manning of faturs is "vain" or "footish fire." These as are supposed to be produced by the decomposi-animal or vegetable matter, and are found in a place, or churchyards. They are popularly "Jack-with-the-lantern" and "Will-o'-the-wi

Apilatou B. ('ound Buffs lows)—Towns easily Apilatou B. ('ound Buffs lows)—Towns to see of the cases of which the only sure is simple easily not. The man is either very much deceived, yand this is by 'ar the most probable conjecture—be is thoroughly untrustworthy and corrupt. A coward who slanders a woman may be forgiven, but must be avoided thoroughly untrustworthy and corrupt. A coward who slanders a woman may be forgiven, but must be avoided

Ozonoz, (Philadelphia, Pa.)—Many a young may woul' say he was in clover were he in the situation in which yed say you are placed, namely, to be believed by two besuifful young laddes. The best way is fail out which of them loves you the better as well as which of them is dearer to you, is to keep away from be in for a while.

A T. (Kirkwood, Mo.)—I. We have never heard of hydr's soid, but from the word we judge it might be some j ker's name for water. There is an aydidicated composed of hydrogen and locins. I the acknowing sment of the rec ipt of the eard was quite proper. As to the correspondence, you had better write and ask if is is agreeable to here.

E (Tipton, Iowa)—It is a historical fact that President Monroe, at his second election, had the unanimous ote of the Electral College with on a great too. What it was the voted against him or for what reason we not know. It is not beginty obligatory on the electors of a state to vote for one nerson if by chance electors might be cheene from each tiest.

I. W. P. (Warren, Pa.)—Love is a very different feeling from that species of filtration and marriment which often characterizes the jyens hours of years. Genuine and heartfest love is sober, serious and sodate It is one of the most serious not institute as possible. B, L (Monterey, Cal)—If you are not engaged to the young gentleman, it is very indiscreat for you to be so demonstrative as you describe you was a few or over the first has the inclined towards a varietialer gentleman, but the out to exercise all possible control over hereoff is order to betray her preddictions so little as possible. As a mat er of rours, when once you are engaged to demonstrative as you describe you was presented as a state of the serious and trankly allow the gentleman to read the true state of young method to be preddiction. He may have the story of habits, etc. is correct. In a most-ter, involving perhapi the whole heapting and see if you cannot bring not to take up.

H. C. (Richland, C.) — A road is a way. If it be highway, it may be a road still; but, if H. C. anyone else were to try to play irielay on a road whit is a nighway in law, she would e-consist inconvent ence and become amenable to penaltine, not email by similar performances as a private way or ros Strictly 'peaking, a road must be adapted for it tame of wheeled vehicles, to that, although a road a way, a way is not always a road. It is "you an oo q cetton whather a way is a road if it be not set coulty wide to allow two vehicles to pass one another a to bring the 'rule of the road' to bear upon it trame.

T W. S. (Albemaria, Va.)—We really cannot tell you how to become popular with the ladies. This is a matter in which one must be his own instructor. Trying to be truly p lite and agreeable is the only general rule that can be given. 2. To explain the business of courtainty and marriage would exhaut as eccan of link. It is impossible of explaintation. business of courtably and marriage would exhaut as a cean of ink. It is impossible of explanation. There it is, and so we have to late it. 2. We know of so firm requiring such assistance, and with the best feeling in tan world. Judging from your latter, we went advis you not to seek such a position in the city. 4. Wesh the hards in outmost and water or use given ine when they begin to chap.

ine when they begin to chap.

N. J. R. ("hitadelphia, Pa.)—some authorities, speaking of "running the gant'et" make it a put'shmeut originating among safees where the erwiprovided with gauntiet to or ropus' ends, were drawn up in two rows facing each other and the delicquest had to run between them. Other inverseration is rives the word gauntiet from the Fre-ch, being its iron glove and that "runwing the gauntiet" is directly connected with this as a military punishment. The delicquent had to run between the lines of the seldiers who were only permitted to strike with its glov-d hand—that is the hand with the gaunties de.
Hence it is called "running the gaunties."

HAYWOOD. (Junctham's Orest. N. C.)—In the answer 199) was a misprint for 1900, manufag no mare Harwood. (Janathan's Orest. N. ().)—In the answer 199) was a misprint for 1996, meaning so more this century. The correspondent same represents in 1920 will have five Sandays, and every more thereof er u til 1998 and then not until 215. This is apported by years centring at the case of three for the tries in measured occurs from the fact that the gain 1990 and 2100 though least years, are not really at having only 38 days each. This is according to the Gregorian account, ordered by Pope. Geography 1998, in order to make the civil and make year and pack is gather—the civil year being: If winning only 38 days each, this difference amounted to about 3 days in 60 years.

Cooper, (Passic, N. J.)—In the strank at many part and the page of the civil and selections.

COOPER, (Passie, N. J.)—In the strain at red, white, yellow, and blue have long ber as the most can epiceous colors. With most status the colors of the news at see a color of the news at see and the see a color of the news at see a color of the news at see at the color of the news at see a color of the news at see and the new at see a color of the news at the new a